I think Jackie and you will get along well. Jackie started going by Jackie instead of Jack about 2 months ago - I am not sure of all the reasons why...I also feel like Jackiee has been regressing behavior wise. anyway - letting you know I got the schedule. See you soon, and thank you for sending it.

Hey, John! Great seeing you all today :)

I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

JaF Fall 2022 Schedule

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

Hi John,

I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

The place looks cool. Jackie takes nighttime meds at 5:30 that help Jackie wind down, so I don't think an evening spot would be helpful. The problem with Saturday is that Jackie has alternating Saturdays with me and Jackie's mom...and she does not like to bring Jackie to any appointments...and I feel strongly that Jackie needs weekly appointments. Let me talk to Jackie and get that perspective and get back to you.

Hey again, John!

I totally understand and hear your concerns. Here is a short video link to the Portland location and a few pics if you'd like to check it out! Everyone really seems to enjoy this space.
https://youtu.be/tKDQ07XC2Rk

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Dani and Akhilah,

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

Hi John,

I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Hi Akhilah.

Beatriz is Jackie's other therapist (non-art-therapist) at Seven County Services. Jackie used to see Lindsey Smith there, but Lindsey has moved on and taken a different position.

I was able to meet with Beatriz today, and she said because of Medicaid rules, you each are not allowed to work on a treatment plan with any kind of overlap. I learn more things about how tough Medicaid makes things every day, yet have no control right now over choosing any other type of insurance.

Akhilah, could you please send me a copy of the treatment plan - I realize you only recently began seeing Jackie, so a copy of the plan that Dani had might be the best thing in the interim. I know you are still formulating a plan for Jackie at the moment.

If you can send it to me, and to Beatriz, it would be great appreciated.

I'm confident that you both will be great for Jackie. By the way, I found some 'spinners' at my parents house for the game that Jackie and you were working on, and will try to remember to send them with Jackie tonight when Jackie heads back to her mom's house.

I'm heading into my bankruptcy hearing shortly. Wish me luck please.

John

p.s. You may fax the treatment plan if that is easier, to 502.996.8246 (my personal fax number that I have for medical record transfer purposes). Whatever is easier for you. Also - you should already have paperwork on file that allows you, and Seven County Services, to exchange information freely...and if you need any other paperwork please let me know. Thank you.

Hi Akhilah and Theresa.

I am writing with regard to Jackie and a referral Jackie's doctor (Dr. Mahajan) wrote for Jackie to go to the PAGE clinic at the Novak Center.

In order for Jackie to schedule an appointment, we have to have a letter from a mental health provider. The letter we need has requirements that are outlined in the attached template.

I asked the Pediatric Endocrinology Department if a letter from art therapy would be okay, and they said that it should be fine if the art therapist is comfortable affirming Jackie's gender identity.

They also provided a listing of mental health professionals that they said do letters for them regularly - but said we would not have to add another therapist on to Jackie's team if a therapist we already had could do the letter for Jackie. I need to start saying Jaqquelyn. I am still getting used to the newer more full name. I have to say, however, that I do really like the way that Jaqquelyn decided to spell it.

Please let me know if you all can do a letter. Because they are able to use puberty blocking agents, and Jackie is beginning to go through puberty, I feel like time is of the essence. If you all are not able to do the letter, please let me know that as well, so I could try to get Jackie an appointment with an additional provider of mental health services.

Hey, John! Great seeing you all today :)

I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

JaF Fall 2022 Schedule

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Dani and Akhilah,

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

Hi John,

I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Hey, John! Great seeing you all today :)

I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

JaF Fall 2022 Schedule

Session Days	Times/ Cancellations
December 8	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm - FIRST FALL SESSION 2022
December 22	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm - LAST FALL SESSION 2022
January 5 (2023)	Resume sessions - 7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
January 19	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
February 2	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
February 16	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
March 2	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
March 16	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
March 30	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
April 13	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm
April 27	7:30 pm - 8:20 pm

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Thank you - I understand everything that you said. Part of the issue is that Jackie has such anger, and I don't know where it stems from, and I don't think Jackie really knows either. Today, on the ride to Bardstown and back for me for TMS....Jackie admitted that Jackie just takes Jackie's anger out on me (and not on anyone else). I told Jackie I appreciated that that was possible - to voice that out loud - and that I was proud of Jackie for realizing and acknowledging this. I also told Jackie that it is hard on me to absorb that negative energy (because it really is - it did not used to be)...before I got really sick it was not a big issue...but now...it is...so it is something that we need to work on...

Have not heard from Akhilah at all - I am concerned about the lack of communication - each time she is supposed to communicate, it seems that she doesn't. I am still waiting on her to get back to me from that email on Nov. 17th....it is 13 days later today - the holidays were in there...but still....it is concerning to me...I need to know if the every other week at 7:30pm is still going to work for her??? Can you find out since she has not communicated that? Can you find out please if she does not want to deal with Jackie or something? I want to make sure it is going to be a good fit.

First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
> For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

I cced Dani on this email bc I wanted to ask her a few questions too.

Dani....

Did you get a chance to talk with Jackie about how transition of therapists work? I think Jackie is angry with me partly because she won't be able to see you anymore after next time. How do I handle that anger?

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

> Great question how you pronounce Ahkilah's name is (Ah-kee-lah), and I can also provide a line of contact for them once they meet JaF. For JaF contacting me after our time together, I will have a discussion with my supervisor as to how to have this conversation with JaF. Due to my time ending with JaF, I will no longer have contact information with them such as email, phone number, etc. Therefore, there will not be be a line accessible for me to be reached at. However, I can have this conversation with JaF in a different way to explore change, transition, and how we can overcome this challenge.

Yes I would like to meet the new therapist (he/she?) - how do you pronounce their name?

Also - Jackie wanted to know about how to keep in touch with you once you are no longer at LET.

Darcie,

Thanks so much for your time this morning. I'm so glad to hear you are taking care of the dust at your place, literally... Jackie and I both have pretty severe dust allergies and dust mite allergies, and asthma, so it's great to hear you take care of things!! I've been trying to help my parents clean their home, but they don't appreciate the help so I've had to 'grin and bear it' as they say...

Attached, please find a copy of the 504 plan in draft form - I realized I do not have a copy of the finalized form, so I asked Jennifer Rullan (Counselor a school) for a copy of the final form - but it should be the same as this one.

Also, please see below, screenshots of an anger workbook we completed as part of homeschool - because I believe strongly - that emotional intelligence and education is as important if not more so than intellectual intelligence and education.

Also, please find attached, information about Gastroparesis from NORD (National Organization for Rare Disorders), and information / screenshots of two emotions wheels Jackie used with Akhilah and Dani - former art therapists (or Akhilah is still there I guess) - but Jackie seemed to be improving on recognizing emotions by utilizing the emotions wheels...

Jackie even made a game with Akhilah that was pretty cool - maybe you and she could play it sometime.

No worries! Here is a virtual link for tonight
https://video.simplepractice.com/appt-472802928634030a1f40b7dc3e57d7b9?callback=simplepractice

As far as I am understanding, the bill was originally going to affect mental health services, but to my understanding it got excluded so gender affirming mental health care wouldn't be affected. That was a week ago when I heard that, I am not sure if it still stands that way. I know you mentioned reaching out to LYG before, but I would definitely encourage reaching back out to them again just to ask some of these questions. They are pretty insightful, I know the director that works over there. He/They are kinda awesome.

As far as getting info to speak to someone, I believe the first 24 hrs there may not be any info available, but I could be wrong. You could try back tomorrow and see if you can tell them what happened and see about getting in touch with her. I also don't know if it makes a difference, if you are listed as an emergency contact if they are allowed to share any info. If you have the same last name, you may be able to use that to get in touch.

And yes, I spoke with the SC case worker. Glad she was able to get in touch. She mentioned trying to get in touch with the ABA therapist as well. Happy to be able to connect with J's other therapists to assist in being able to provide the best care possible :)

Hey, hope all is well!
I won't have online clients. Someone will be there tomorrow if you want to drop it off, you are more than welcome to if that works for you! I won't be back there as I will be at Life's Journey Counseling in St Matthews area.

Thanks so much!

Awesome! I was a mentor for Children of Incarcerated Parents, and it was a great opportunity for both myself and my mentee (we had fun). However, I know now I just don't have the much deserved time to dedicate to a mentee as I did then (in my early 20s).

I do think having a mentor would be great for J, so I'm happy you are open to the idea. There is an application process with BBBS, to be sure they have a good match available, but it sounds like it would be worth applying and you never know unless you try! There are other programs as well if BBBS isn't what you're looking for.

Again, know I am not in a position to be a mentor, as I have done years ago, but I am more than welcome to provide any resources or info if I am able to do so/ have any available. I just don't want J to need someone to "be there" for them and I don't have the time to dedicate/ carve out that they would need as a mentor would. That could be problematic for them.

This is an excellent time to discuss the changes and uncertainties in life, and the beauty that comes with it. Caterpillars 🐛 to Butterflies 🦋 Seasons (Winter to spring, Spring to Summer, Summer to Fall, Fall to Winter), Flowers 💐 and how all these changes relate to growth. Helping J to adjust to change I feel is crucial, as it's the only part of life that's constant/ consistent.

Here are some videos that talk about adjusting to change. I can try and provide more resources, but I think with change itself being scary, and consistently differentiating fear from danger, these conversations can be very productive.

Fear vs Danger (you may want to look these over first)

2. https://youtu.be/R2FqW7B0Qis (this is a longer podcast)

Maybe we could discuss some of this next time we meet.

I would love to see them connected with a mentor as well, are you open to connecting with any? I know someone at the Big Bro Big Sis program who informed me of the process and was excited for me to pass the intake info to you all if interested! I rethink they deserve to connect with someone who can carve out specific time for them to just enjoy their company and offer guidance during those difficult "middle school years". I know that age was rough for me 😫 I can try and find more mentorship referral info, but here is the BBBS link

Akhilah,

A few things. First - thank you for always being so good with Jaqquelyn, and so outreaching, and so helpful, and for all the guidance you have provided and anything I am missing saying there. You are amazing. And, honestly, I don't know what I would have done without you to help Jackie at times, so thank you so much....

I contacted Michael Pedigo and left a message. I also contacted Open Doors Counseling Center. I was able to reach the receptionist there named Natalia, and will be sending them our insurance cards and stuff shortly. They have a Lexington number, but they do telehealth at home, so that is great. My fear there, is that my dad especially, does not support transgender rights (at all), and we live in his house, and Jackie may feel too uncomfortable for therapy to have a benefit. I told Jackie though, that I could drive Jackie to the Salt River here or something and give her privacy so she could talk about whatever she wanted to.

Our plan of action, is to get set up at Open Doors Counseling Center to go on and get the letter we need for the Novak PAGE Center, and that from there, we can decide if the new therapy is working out or not and make changes as necessary. Flexibility right?? That is the key to success.....actually....the key to success in all things in life is communication...I feel...

Okay - that all being said....Jackie is going to be there tomorrow night in person with her mom. Jackie wants to do a special project with you and mom together. Then Jackie said on the last session, that Jackie wants to do a special project with you and me together.

I realize this may be unconventional of an ask, but is there any way that Jackie could stay in touch with you after joining the other practice....not for therapy necessarily unless we need to ping something off of you....but as a friend to Jackie basically?? Jackie really does not have any friends, and has had so much transition in life, that Jackie doesn't really feel solid about anything I don't think. It hurts my heart...

Let me know when you can, and thank you again for all.

Hey! Yes, most definitely agree. Psychological flexibility is an important key to happiness (hence my being drawn to the modality of ACT).

I am happy to do the activities J has requested for the last sessions. I am so thrilled, and flattered at the idea of wanting to be my friend :) they are truly an amazing individual. I want to remain open to allow any resources you all may need for referrals, as long as I can do so I totally will!

I would love to see them connected with a mentor as well, are you open to connecting with any? I know someone at the Big Bro Big Sis program who informed me of the process and was excited for me to pass the intake info to you all if interested! I rethink they deserve to connect with someone who can carve out specific time for them to just enjoy their company and offer guidance during those difficult “middle school years”. I know that age was rough for me 😫 I can try and find more mentorship referral info, but here is the BBBS link https://www.bbbsky.org/child-application

I’m sure you have heard of them, but take a look and see what you think!

I was able to reach the receptionist there named Natalia, and will be sending them our insurance cards and stuff shortly. They have a Lexington number, but they do telehealth at home, so that is great. My fear there, is that my dad especially, does not support transgender rights (at all), and we live in his house, and Jackie may feel too uncomfortable for therapy to have a benefit. I told Jackie though, that I could drive Jackie to the Salt River here or something and give her privacy so she could talk about whatever she wanted to.

Flexibility right?? That is the key to success.....actually....the key to success in all things in life is communication...I feel...

Okay - that all being said....Jackie is going to be there tomorrow night in person with her mom. Jackie wants to do a special project with you and mom together. Then Jackie said on the last session, that Jackie wants to do a special project with you and me together.

I realize this may be unconventional of an ask, but is there any way that Jackie could stay in touch with you after joining the other practice....not for therapy necessarily unless we need to ping something off of you....but as a friend to Jackie basically?? Jackie really does not have any friends, and has had so much transition in life, that Jackie doesn't really feel solid about anything I don't think. It hurts my heart...

Let me know when you can, and thank you again for all.

Spoke to another therapist there, and I would definitely like to see you connect with them as well, if possible. They provided me with their direct email, and gave lots of info about all the things we discussed. They also have support groups.

Very knowledgeable and lots of support! Can call Mon- TH 9-5 859 - 780 - 8746

I asked the Pediatric Endocrinology Department if a letter from art therapy would be okay, and they said that it should be fine if the art therapist is comfortable affirming Jackie's gender identity.

They also provided a listing of mental health professionals that they said do letters for them regularly - but said we would not have to add another therapist on to Jackie's team if a therapist we already had could do the letter for Jackie. I need to start saying Jaqquelyn. I am still getting used to the newer more full name. I have to say, however, that I do really like the way that Jaqquelyn decided to spell it.

Please let me know if you all can do a letter. Because they are able to use puberty blocking agents, and Jackie is beginning to go through puberty, I feel like time is of the essence. If you all are not able to do the letter, please let me know that as well, so I could try to get Jackie an appointment with an additional provider of mental health services.

Hey! I would really like to have a conversation about this, as there are things you are mentioning that I would like to address as well regarding getting needed support in place for these upcoming years.

I will reach back out to you before we meet Thursday, but definitely have some things we should touch base with day of session as well.

Thanks!

- Two (2) references, the third is optional -

  - What is needed is the name, email address and phone number of a staff member (counselor, teacher, administrator) in your student's current school.
  - They can be a current or previous staff member.
  - They do NOT have to write a recommendation letter.
  - The Phoenix will contact the person making the recommendation and explain what we need.
  - Home-schooled students
    - If your student has been home-schooled for less than one (1) year, enter recommendation information from previous school.
    - If home-schooled for more than one (1) year, provide contact information from community member, mental health counselor, behavior coach, social worker, etc.

Actually, it says the Phoenix School will contact you and let you know what they need, so I guess in that case, I will just give them your L.E.T. contact information, but this way you will have a heads up.

Awesome! I will be waiting for their call.

Good luck! I'll let you know when they contact me. Have a great weekend!

https://video.simplepractice.com/appt-472802928634030a1f40b7dc3e57d7b9?callback=simplepractice

As far as I am understanding, the bill was originally going to affect mental health services, but to my understanding it got excluded so gender affirming mental health care wouldn't be affected. That was a week ago when I heard that, I am not sure if it still stands that way. I know you mentioned reaching out to LYG before, but I would definitely encourage reaching back out to them again just to ask some of these questions. They are pretty insightful, I know the director that works over there. He/They are kinda awesome.

As far as getting info to speak to someone, I believe the first 24 hrs there may not be any info available, but I could be wrong. You could try back tomorrow and see if you can tell them what happened and see about getting in touch with her. I also don't know if it makes a difference, if you are listed as an emergency contact if they are allowed to share any info. If you have the same last name, you may be able to use that to get in touch.

And yes, I spoke with the SC case worker. Glad she was able to get in touch. She mentioned trying to get in touch with the ABA therapist as well. Happy to be able to connect with J's other therapists to assist in being able to provide the best care possible :)

Hey! I really think J would enjoy this group, and you would be able to get the gender affirming resources you might need. They are really compassionate, loving, and safeX and would be a great benefit I believe if you could connect with them. You can reach out and ask questions, even if you don't end up participating in the meetups/group sessions, etc.

Greetings!

You can learn more about LYG's programs, View our program calendar, and choose which groups to attend here: https://louisvilleyouthgroup.org/home/programming-2 - Note: To join the Virtual Group, the participant will need to email us for the link prior to the meeting.
We also hold special events throughout the year, which are announced on social media (@wearelyg on facebook and instagram) and through the Remind Text app. We recommend staying connected to LYG virtually to get the most up to date information.

Sign up for Program and Event Announcements via Text Message through the Remind App:

- Youth Participants (under 18) can join as a "student" by visiting remind.com/join/lygprog or text @lygprog to 81010
  The Remind App uses your birth date to verify that you are 13 or older. Remind does not allow us to contact anyone who registers with a birth date that would make them under 13.
- Young Adults (ages 18-24) can join as a "Student" by visiting remind.com/join/lygrising or text @lygrising to 81010
- Parents & Caregivers can join as a "parent" by visiting remind.com/join/lygparents or text @lygparents to 81010
- Teachers, Counselors, and Service Providers can join as a "teacher" by visiting remind.com/join/lygprog3 or text @lygprog3 to 81010

Our youth participants are often chatting with each other on our Discord Server, which is for ages 13+. To join the virtual community, the young person will need to download the Discord App, create a profile, and then follow this link: https://discord.gg/exsQZVkTTr

> NOTE: The server is a mostly unmoderated space, but there are rules and agreements in place to keep everyone safe. All Participants are asked to read and sign a list of Community Agreements and fill out the Introduction before getting full access to the server. Members may be muted or banned from the server at any time for breaking these agreements.

We are here to help, so feel free to reach out with any further questions or concerns.

Hey! Hope all has been well with you guys. I apologize for not being able to shoot you all a session follow up, but I had been meaning to tell you the last two sessions on 2/23 and 3/2 went really well and I was so proud of J for how she did with the structure of our session! We did well on 3/9 as well, I just know she was excited to spend some time with mom and had a little trouble focusing. Totally understandable, of course.

I do want to let you know that we will have to be virtual for tomorrow 3/16, as I have a slight cold/allergy situation that would keep me from being in person this week.

Let me know if this works for you all, if so here is the link we would be using (another reminder from SP should be emailed as well): https://video.simplepractice.com/appt-d0dea7b32fcd678f558a39d9928c88bc

Subject: Session follow up from 2/2/2023

Hey! Just wanted to provide a session follow up before we meet again this upcoming session, on 2/16/2023.

What we discussed:
Respecting Important Boundaries - I think it is important to continue the discussion of boundaries. This includes discussions of financial struggles, custody, or other matters that may increase J's overall anxieties/fears (which is the last goal listed on J's Treatment Plan).

The other part is J respecting boundaries with others. I believe she does really well with understanding what a boundary is, and that she could attack some of her treatment plan goals by discussing the effects of when a boundary is violated and upholding the effects of the boundary violation. We can continue to flesh this out more as well, but the ABA therapist mentioned covering this in her sessions with you all when we last spoke. I won't be working on the "same things" you will be working on with her, but there will obviously always be some understandable overlap.

Mom Receiving a Check in - I did follow up with mom, and she is connected to the proper resources she needs. This will not be discussed in session in front of J, unless J brings it up in which case she is free to discuss as she wishes for purposes of reassurance.

Catastrophic Language - mom and dad both have mentioned J bringing up phrases such as "do you want to kill me" or "don't stab me mommy". After discussing with my supervisor, as well as the ABA therapist, psychologist, We will continue to explore J's views on the reasoning behind the language itself. I have thoughts based on feedback from the other therapists, but I will provide feedback based on J's response as we continue to explore her emotions behind some of her catastrophic verbalizations.

Session Structure -
1. Feelings check in
2. Go over ground rules (is it safe, kind, responsible? Respect our bodies, mind, and our space/environment)
3. Choose Expressive Arts Activity from the “JaF Book”
4. Feelings Check in.

I want to keep this same structure each week, so J knows what is expected, and so that we are able to focus more on J's goals/objectives and better monitor success.

Also, this will be beneficial in assisting J with her current goals (particularly with the second goal relating to structured tasks):

- To develop coping strategies for negative emotions; in particular anger, increase of emotional expression, increase in social cues, empathy, and acceptance of supportive boundaries.
- To handle structured tasks pertaining to school work and chores regularly.

- To reduce fear and anxiety, over all.

Activity:
J led/introduced an expressive arts activity where everyone participated in drawing a city reflection on 4 different parts of the paper. This was an activity that touched on J's goals by exercising self confidence to aid in the reduction of fear/anxiety.

Next session:

- I want to continue with our structure from last week (mentioned above - Initial Check in, Ground Rules/Boundary Results, Expressive Arts Activity J can pick from her compiled book of activities, Final Check in).
- J will choose an expressive arts activity from her "Je Book" (the book will have new activities in it each week to choose from, specifically pertaining to J's treatment plan goals). I want to be sure J knows that she is free to choose any activity she likes, and that a timer will be set so that we have time for the final check in.
- If J chooses an activity that does not pertain to a goal we might need to give more attention to for the week, I will choose one directly after the first activity J chooses so that we are sure to touch on every goal listed in J's treatment plan consistently.
- J's Dry Erase Chore Chart
- Healthy Boundaries

I will review the documentation you sent, per our last email regarding J's treatment plan/ client files/ Diagnoses. I will get back with you if there is anything else that needs to be discussed regarding this info. Thanks so much for being prompt in getting this to me!

Please let me know if you have any comments or concerns. Unless anything changes, I will see you all Thursday!

I agree, it could be beneficial to seek psychological services for J as you mentioned to address ongoing fears. I do want to say, after our last session I have some thoughts about J's fears. I have noticed a few times things being discussed in front of J regarding custody, as well as financial struggles. This has happened a few times, but I haven't addressed it in depth until our last session this past Thursday. I know you mentioned some of these challenges/difficulties being worse than previously, and I also notice J being included in a lot of these discussions.

Although I am not a psychologist, I do think these issues being discussed in front of J could potentially exacerbate some of her fears and partly contribute to some of her insecurities as well as some of J's catastrophic language. I know you are doing all you can for J, so I am by no means taking away from all you provide. You are awesome at being a proactive parent, kudos :) I also know, we are still getting to know each other, but just wanted to provide some of my observations/feedback.

Given that our initial sessions have been mainly about developing rapport, as discussed I want to be more intentional with our sessions and stick to a weekly structure. I feel it important to bring up boundaries each session, and I believe this is a boundary (discussing financial/ adult family matters in front of J) that needs to be revisited/ reinforced as a piece to the puzzle in J's self regulation. I will continue to do feelings work with J via expressive arts mediums, I just wanted to be sure we are able to address boundaries a bit more each time we meet. I will shoot you a separate follow up email from last weeks session.

Well we are still on a waiting list right now. I'm having trouble, honestly, making it to the appointments that we have. As you all know, I'm the one that takes Jackie to 99% of appointments, and many times, Jackie's must be in person. With the chronic fatigue situation, it is very difficult. That being said, I think you all also know, that Jackie's care is of the utmost priority to me - my #1 priority is to get Jackie the best care that I can that Jackie needs.

I will follow-up today to see where we are on the other waitlist.

I agree, it could be beneficial to seek psychological services for J as you mentioned to address ongoing fears. I do want to say, after our last session I have some thoughts about J's fears. I have noticed a few times things being discussed in front of J regarding custody, as well as financial struggles. This has happened a few times, but I haven't addressed it in depth until our last session this past Thursday. I know you mentioned some of these challenges/difficulties being worse than previously, and I also notice J being included in a lot of these discussions.

Although I am not a psychologist, I do think these issues being discussed in front of J could potentially exacerbate some of her fears and partly contribute to some of her insecurities as well as some of J's catastrophic language. I know you are doing all you can for J, so I am by no means taking away from all you provide. You are awesome at being a proactive parent, kudos :) I also know, we are still getting to know each other, but just wanted to provide some of my observations/feedback.

Given that our initial sessions have been mainly about developing rapport, as discussed I want to be more intentional with our sessions and stick to a weekly structure. I feel it important to bring up boundaries each session, and I believe this is a boundary (discussing financial/ adult family matters in front of J) that needs to be revisited/ reinforced as a piece to the puzzle in J's self regulation. I will continue to do feelings work with J via expressive arts mediums, I just wanted to be sure we are able to address boundaries a bit more each time we meet. I will shoot you a separate follow up email from last weeks session.

Well we are still on a waiting list right now. I'm having trouble, honestly, making it to the appointments that we have. As you all know, I'm the one that takes Jackie to 99% of appointments, and many times, Jackie's must be in person. With the chronic fatigue situation, it is very difficult. That being said, I think you all also know, that Jackie's care is of the utmost priority to me - my #1 priority is to get Jackie the best care that I can that Jackie needs.

I will follow-up today to see where we are on the other waitlist.

Im CCing Akhilah to make her aware.
What are the next steps?
Do you need referrals to another psychologist?

Thanks

Hey! I have been looking through my emails, and I wanted to be sure I have all of the proper documentation for J in one place. When you get a chance, no rush (you can even bring it next session if that works best), could you provide paperwork documenting assessment for the following diagnoses for J:

- F43.22 - Adjustment disorder with anxiety
- H93.25 - Central auditory processing disorder
- F82.0 - Autistic disorder
- F90.1 - Attention-deficit hyperactive disorder, predominantly hyperactive type

Just wanted to make sure I have J's file put together properly. I reached out to the Doctor at Meridian and he filled me in on the assessment/services rendered. I am also still waiting to hear from Darci Taggert, who I was told is the supervisor to the therapist J sees at SCS.

Let me know if you need any support with getting any documentation together, or if I need to get any of the paperwork from the therapists you listed in the ROI.

Spoke with Lindsay today, everything went well. We spoke about the concerns from JaF's last session and agreed she would schedule to see someone once a week. Also, I want to see you all successfully address the custody issues/other concerns, and to be sure and keep it seperate from JaF's sessions to keep that boundary. I will consult some of my colleagues and get back with you with what they might come up with. I do know that it could be possible to write something up, and have you all sign, date, and notarize it. This is something we did in our family, when we were going through some custody issues, but I can see what other options might be available if I am able to find anything. Otherwise, I believe mom getting the help she needs may play a big part in some of the communication issues that are happening, and seeing things a little more clearly with regards to finding what is best for JaF and all parties involved.

Let me know if you have any more thoughts before we meet again this week, see you Thursday!

FYI, will also be reaching back out to the SC therapist and ABA person as well. Have a great rest of your weekend :)

Spoke with Lindsay today, everything went well. We spoke about the concerns from JaF's last session and agreed she would schedule to see someone once a week. Also, I want to see you all successfully address the custody issues/other concerns, and to be sure and keep it seperate from JaF's sessions to keep that boundary. I will consult some of my colleagues and get back with you with what they might come up with. I do know that it could be possible to write something up, and have you all sign, date, and notarize it. This is something we did in our family, when we were going through some custody issues, but I can see what other options might be available if I am able to find anything. Otherwise, I believe mom getting the help she needs may play a big part in some of the communication issues that are happening, and seeing things a little more clearly with regards to finding what is best for JaF and all parties involved.

Let me know if you have any more thoughts before we meet again this week, see you Thursday!

FYI, will also be reaching back out to the SC therapist and ABA person as well. Have a great rest of your weekend :)

No worries! I will speak with Em to see if there is a way to bill for that time, but no matter what I appreciate the offer to assist. I will let you know, but I believe there wouldn't be anything you needed to do on your end, I think it would be something Em would have to assist me with.

Thanks so much, and I hope you all enjoy your weekend! I will be back in touch with you, once I touch base/follow up with mom.

I completely understand. I know that you are doing all you can, and that everything that was discussed the other day was/is very difficult for all of you. I am confident things will pan out, however I know it will probably take some time before things are fluid, and will certainly take some adjusting/readjusting. I hear everything you are saying. I applaud you in taking on the much needed conversation.

With that being said, I will speak with mom on Sunday. Again, I will still be following up with Em and T so that they can offer support/ resources as well. Hang in there! One step at a time, that is all you can do.

I am not married to you or anything....then she kept saying that Jackie needs to just go back to public school and that would solve all the problems.....but that isn't true at all....Jackie is homeschooled for a reason....she said her only concern was Jackie going to the bathroom...and later said maybe getting bullied.....but I (John) have other concerns....like tardy notes and absent notes not being properly recorded by JCPS staff, bullying, not being allowed to go to the bathroom, being made fun of (and teachers being okay with it) because Jackie has trouble wearing shoes, Jackie not being allowed to self-regulate temperature due to dysautonomia issues...., Jackie not being given time and a half for exams, Jackie not receiving the proper instruction and time for one on one work that Jackie deserves, Jackie's auditory processing disorder not being considered whatsoever - no accommodations in the 504 plan being adhered to etc..
> Then Lindsay said that she is fearful that Jackie is falling greatly behind because I am homeschooling Jackie. I just had to bite my tongue Akhilah.....that's all I can say...

Anyway - she also said that she tried to overdose on Sunday, and that she was disappointed when she woke up on Monday....Jackie was with her I think on that night/day....I would have to check to be sure...but that would be so traumatic that I cannot even imagine what would happen with Jackie.

How can we help make sure that Lindsay gets the help that she needs?

I also need to have boundaries and have the custody agreement accurately reflect what is going on. When we went to marriage counseling before, Lindsay would not ever do any of the things the therapist recommended or suggested, so it was a waste of time....she would not even go if brought up - I am sure...to a family therapist....I am thinking at this point that I just need to do the legal paperwork and submit it to the judge.

The thing is, it requires both signatures...unless there are special circumstances....by the way....Jackie is doing fine grade level wise and is ahead in several areas, and catching up in those areas that JCPS failed to work with Jackie on.

I also think Jackie is doing an outstanding job of participating well in therapy! I don't know if Jackie would be doing so well if it were not for the great atmosphere and great workers/therapists at L.E.T. Thanks for being there for Jackie and for doing all that you do!

I have been to several therapy practices and it seems like you all are more qualified and far better at what you do, and I want to appreciate and give gratitude for that.

JaF's Fears and Socratic thought activity sheet (we will go over this again in next session as well)

Positive affirmations

Grounding techniques

I spoke with the ABA therapist and able to exchange some great feedback. We discussed changing the language of "consequences" to "boundaries" which sounds less punitive.

Seven counties Therapist hasn't returned my call yet, will be reaching back out Friday morning/ afternoon 2/10/2023.

Activities:
- "City Reflection" Drawing
- Kolor Kollides (JaF's feelings game)
- JaF will Choose Activity from the "JaF Book" (which will be filled with fun activities pertaining to JaF's goals, some of which JaF will come up with to be added)
- Feelings Wheel:

for crisis info/ resources that can be of help when experiencing stress/anxiety, depression, hopelessness, or just being overwhelmed. Let me know how else I can be of support! 💌

I will be following up with mom Sunday around noon.

I will speak with Em and T to see what resources they have as well, but I would strongly encourage at least doing MFT once or twice to work through some of the concerning issues brought up tonight. Will look up all the free sources available for working out custody, etc. as well.

I applaud you for staying persistent in doing all the things needs to supper JaF. Keep pushing, dad! 💪🏽 💥 I know it's a struggle, but you are doing all the things you can. I know as a parent it doesn't always feel like it, but you are doing amazing.

I will be following up with mom Sunday around noon.

I will speak with Em and T to see what resources they have as well, but I would strongly encourage at least doing MFT once or twice to work through some of the concerning issues brought up tonight. Will look up all the free sources available for working out custody, etc. as well.

I applaud you for staying persistent in doing all the things needs to supper JaF. Keep pushing, dad! 💪🏽 💥 I know it's a struggle, but you are doing all the things you can. I know as a parent it doesn't always feel like it, but you are doing amazing.

108 - The Sacred Number
[There is more significance to it even than what he is stating here...]

Found this too - this is interesting...

In the Holy Bible Matthews Chapter 10 Verse 8 (108) reads::: Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons; freely ye received, freely give.

Some believe this as the reason for choosing the number 108.

Stonehenges Sarsen Circle is about 108 feet in diameter.

FM Radio frequency upper limit is 108 MHz

The temple bells ring 108 times at year end in Japan

108 degrees Fahrenheit is the internal temperature at which the vital organs of human body begin to fail from overheating

108 is composed of numbers 1, 0 and 8.

1- Stands for supreme truth or god consciousness
0- Stands for nothing or emptiness.
8- Stand for eternity or infinity. Note that the symbol of infinity is obtained by rotating 8 by 90 degrees.

Thus the sacred number 108 tells us that we are at once something, nothing and everything.

Anyway - thought you might find some of those things interesting.

Talk to you soon - thanks for being a good listener and for helping as always. I wanted to also mention how great of a job I think Akhilah is doing with helping Jackie.

See you soon.

Subject: Session follow up from 2/9/2023

Hey! Thanks so much for being so consistent in bringing JaF to session tonight, and for taking the time to share your feelings.

I just wanted to provide you with a recap of what all we discussed, and provide you with the proper resources.

What We Discussed:
I created a structure (written out) for each session: 1. Feelings check in ✅
2. Go over ground rules (is it safe, kind, responsible? Respect our bodies, mind, and our space/environment)
3. Choose Activity from the "JaF Book"
4. Feelings Checkin ✅

This way we can have a clear focus on our goals/ objectives.

JaF's Fears and Socratic thought activity sheet (we will go over this again in next session as well)

Positive affirmations

Grounding techniques

I spoke with the ABA therapist and able to exchange some great feedback. We discussed changing the language of "consequences" to "boundaries" which sounds less punitive.

Seven counties Therapist hasn't returned my call yet, will be reaching back out Friday morning/ afternoon 2/10/2023.

Activities:
- "City Reflection" Drawing
- Kolor Kollides (JaF's feelings game)
- JaF will Choose Activity from the "JaF Book" (which will be filled with fun activities pertaining to JaF's goals, some of which JaF will come up with to be added)
- Feelings Wheel:
https://docs.google.com/document/d/1Ej6KaEtRr4QqpNce559Q8tgQk4H756AxiErbztpI5xY/edit

Resources (sent to mom) in addition to a safety plan:

Download these two apps!

Worry kit -
https://apps.apple.com/app/id1476565303
Mood Tracker -
https://apps.apple.com/app/id1023271188

Please click here >>

for crisis info/ resources that can be of help when experiencing stress/anxiety, depression, hopelessness, or just being overwhelmed. Let me know how else I can be of support! 💌

I will be following up with mom Sunday around noon.

I will speak with Em and T to see what resources they have as well, but I would strongly encourage at least doing MFT once or twice to work through some of the concerning issues brought up tonight. Will look up all the free sources available for working out custody, etc. as well.

Akhilah - take home activities are good - I incorporated the feelings chart into school today. As Jackie stated, last week at Mommy's house it wasn't discussed. I don't know how to improve the consistency for Jackie. I wish there were a more cohesive co-parenting situation. I understand some things are simply beyond what I am able to accommodate for Jackie - and all I can do is the best that I can do for Jackie when Jackie is with me.

Good morning! I sent a text, but I am sure you are busy during this time of day. I wanted to shoot this your way, as it pertains to J's goals/tasks. You may or may not feel this is a good fit, and maybe some of this will be discussed with the Behavioral Therapist, but here is it is just in case.

Task Sheet for J (CLICK HERE):
Instructions - you can print off this task sheet each week, or have it laminated so that you can check things off daily with dry erase marker. It contains two pages, so that if you print it off it can be printed front and back.
- You can receive a check mark for completing each task listed in the far left column.

- For each check mark you receive, you also gets to fill in a line on the right side
- As you progress upward (on the thermometer on the right), you eventually reach the goal at the top!
- Once you reach the goal, you can receive a small treat for the week!

Note: Before beginning the tasks, at the beginning of the week, discuss what the treat will be at the end of the week, and you can even print out a picture of it to put on the refrigerator, or hang on wall in room. Or, you can but something small, wrap/decorate it, and have it be a surprise!

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

Jackie to continue going to 7 County Services. I am still trying to get Jackie in to see Meridian Behavioral Health (from a psychologist perspective). I need to follow up on that again today.

I will review the plan as my eyes allow. I am going to see about adding some things too that we can talk about. There have been some things that Jackie has come up with that are good of course because they are needs that are seen by Jackie, and also some things that I need to have added as goals.

Thank you for making the updates that you have made.

We will see you tonight.

Task Sheet for J (CLICK HERE):
Instructions - you can print off this task sheet each week, or have it laminated so that you can check things off daily with dry erase marker. It contains two pages, so that if you print it off it can be printed front and back.
- You can receive a check mark for completing each task listed in the far left column.

- For each check mark you receive, you also gets to fill in a line on the right side
- As you progress upward (on the thermometer on the right), you eventually reach the goal at the top!
- Once you reach the goal, you can receive a small treat for the week!

Note: Before beginning the tasks, at the beginning of the week, discuss what the treat will be at the end of the week, and you can even print out a picture of it to put on the refrigerator, or hang on wall in room. Or, you can but something small, wrap/decorate it, and have it be a surprise!

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

Jackie to continue going to 7 County Services. I am still trying to get Jackie in to see Meridian Behavioral Health (from a psychologist perspective). I need to follow up on that again today.

I will review the plan as my eyes allow. I am going to see about adding some things too that we can talk about. There have been some things that Jackie has come up with that are good of course because they are needs that are seen by Jackie, and also some things that I need to have added as goals.

Thank you for making the updates that you have made.

We will see you tonight.

John

p.s. The ABA Therapist is coming here to meet with us for the first time from 1:30pm to 3:30pm.

You are right, some things time will have to heal on its own. However, I will let you know how things go when I talk with mom before we meet next week.

Keep pushing, John! 💪🏽

I understand some things are simply beyond what I am able to accommodate for Jackie - and all I can do is the best that I can do for Jackie when Jackie is with me.

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

Just to throw some of the things out there.....

Goals:

For Jackie to not feel as scared to go places in the house on Jackie's own.

To be able to give mommy and daddy both privacy when they are using the bathroom.

To be able to go to the bathroom without mommy and daddy needing to be right there.

To reduce fear of Slenderman.

To reduce fear of Pennywise.

To reduce fear of mirrors in general.

To be able to enjoy trees without thinking bad things will happen - this is related to Slenderman too.

For Jackie to be able to understand and accept the word No.

To work toward Jackie sleeping in Jackie's own room - because then Jackie and parents at each of their respective houses will get better rest.

For Jackie to have more structure, start doing chores again, and earn allowances or other incentives.

I hear you, and awesome in the feelings wheel :)

You are right, some things time will have to heal on its own. However, I will let you know how things go when I talk with mom before we meet next week.

Keep pushing, John! 💪🏽

Good morning! I sent a text, but I am sure you are busy during this time of day. I wanted to shoot this your way, as it pertains to J's goals/tasks. You may or may not feel this is a good fit, and maybe some of this will be discussed with the Behavioral Therapist, but here is it is just in case.

Task Sheet for J (CLICK HERE):
Instructions - you can print off this task sheet each week, or have it laminated so that you can check things off daily with dry erase marker. It contains two pages, so that if you print it off it can be printed front and back.
- You can receive a check mark for completing each task listed in the far left column.
- For each check mark you receive, you also gets to fill in a line on the right side
- As you progress upward (on the thermometer on the right), you eventually reach the goal at the top!
- Once you reach the goal, you can receive a small treat for the week!

Note: Before beginning the tasks, at the beginning of the week, discuss what the treat will be at the end of the week, and you can even print out a picture of it to put on the refrigerator, or hang on wall in room. Or, you can but something small, wrap/decorate it, and have it be a surprise!

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

You are right, some things time will have to heal on its own. However, I will let you know how things go when I talk with mom before we meet next week.

Keep pushing, John! 💪🏽

Akhilah - take home activities are good - I incorporated the feelings chart into school today. As Jackie stated, last week at Mommy's house it wasn't discussed. I don't know how to improve the consistency for Jackie. I wish there were a more cohesive co-parenting situation. I understand some things are simply beyond what I am able to accommodate for Jackie - and all I can do is the best that I can do for Jackie when Jackie is with me.

Good morning! I sent a text, but I am sure you are busy during this time of day. I wanted to shoot this your way, as it pertains to J's goals/tasks. You may or may not feel this is a good fit, and maybe some of this will be discussed with the Behavioral Therapist, but here is it is just in case.

Task Sheet for J (CLICK HERE):
Instructions - you can print off this task sheet each week, or have it laminated so that you can check things off daily with dry erase marker. It contains two pages, so that if you print it off it can be printed front and back.
- You can receive a check mark for completing each task listed in the far left column.
- For each check mark you receive, you also gets to fill in a line on the right side
- As you progress upward (on the thermometer on the right), you eventually reach the goal at the top!
- Once you reach the goal, you can receive a small treat for the week!

Note: Before beginning the tasks, at the beginning of the week, discuss what the treat will be at the end of the week, and you can even print out a picture of it to put on the refrigerator, or hang on wall in room. Or, you can but something small, wrap/decorate it, and have it be a surprise!

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

Goals:

For Jackie to not feel as scared to go places in the house on Jackie's own.

To be able to give mommy and daddy both privacy when they are using the bathroom.

To be able to go to the bathroom without mommy and daddy needing to be right there.

To reduce fear of Slenderman.

To reduce fear of Pennywise.

To reduce fear of mirrors in general.

To be able to enjoy trees without thinking bad things will happen - this is related to Slenderman too.

For Jackie to be able to understand and accept the word No.

To work toward Jackie sleeping in Jackie's own room - because then Jackie and parents at each of their respective houses will get better rest.

For Jackie to have more structure, start doing chores again, and earn allowances or other incentives.

To reduce fear of Slenderman.

To be able to enjoy trees without thinking bad things will happen - this is related to Slenderman too.

For Jackie to be able to understand and accept the word No.

To work toward Jackie sleeping in Jackie's own room - because then Jackie and parents at each of their respective houses will get better rest.

For Jackie to have more structure, start doing chores again, and earn allowances or other incentives.

I see that an ROI has been completed on your end on 1/17/23, but is missing some info as to whom permission is given and for what.

We can use the plan we have in place (attached), and it wouldn't really have anything to do with the other therapies J is involved in. I made the goals and objectives simple to leave room for other work to be done with J's other therapists. I don't want to overwhelm her, nor overlap with other work she may be doing.

If the ROI's aren't completed, I am unable to speak to any of J's other therapists, or any other parties via call, text or email regarding J's treatment as it would be a violation of their privacy.

We can discuss this further on Thursday when we meet, but wanted to be clear about the treatment as it stands.

See you all Thursday!

Let me know if you have any questions.

FYI, I can send take home activities you all are welcome to try/utilize with this chart. These would be things pertaining to J's over all goals/tasks, which we can touch on during session as well.

FW:
Good morning! I sent a text, but I am sure you are busy during this time of day. I wanted to shoot this your way, as it pertains to J's goals/tasks. You may or may not feel this is a good fit, and maybe some of this will be discussed with the Behavioral Therapist, but here is it is just in case.

Task Sheet for J (CLICK HERE):
Instructions - you can print off this task sheet each week, or have it laminated so that you can check things off daily with dry erase marker. It contains two pages, so that if you print it off it can be printed front and back.
- You can receive a check mark for completing each task listed in the far left column.
- For each check mark you receive, you also gets to fill in a line on the right side
- As you progress upward (on the thermometer on the right), you eventually reach the goal at the top!
- Once you reach the goal, you can receive a small treat for the week!

Note: Before beginning the tasks, at the beginning of the week, discuss what the treat will be at the end of the week, and you can even print out a picture of it to put on the refrigerator, or hang on wall in room. Or, you can but something small, wrap/decorate it, and have it be a surprise!

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

Good morning! I sent a text, but I am sure you are busy during this time of day. I wanted to shoot this your way, as it pertains to J's goals/tasks. You may or may not feel this is a good fit, and maybe some of this will be discussed with the Behavioral Therapist, but here is it is just in case.

Task Sheet for J (CLICK HERE):
Instructions - you can print off this task sheet each week, or have it laminated so that you can check things off daily with dry erase marker. It contains two pages, so that if you print it off it can be printed front and back.
- You can receive a check mark for completing each task listed in the far left column.
- For each check mark you receive, you also gets to fill in a line on the right side
- As you progress upward (on the thermometer on the right), you eventually reach the goal at the top!
- Once you reach the goal, you can receive a small treat for the week!

Note: Before beginning the tasks, at the beginning of the week, discuss what the treat will be at the end of the week, and you can even print out a picture of it to put on the refrigerator, or hang on wall in room. Or, you can but something small, wrap/decorate it, and have it be a surprise!

No worries if you don't want to use this, or if you already have something else you'd rather use instead. This is simply a suggestion based off the tasks you mentioned in the last email. Let me know your thoughts, and if you think this would be a good idea for her!

Just to throw some of the things out there.....

Goals:

For Jackie to not feel as scared to go places in the house on Jackie's own.

To be able to give mommy and daddy both privacy when they are using the bathroom.

To be able to go to the bathroom without mommy and daddy needing to be right there.

To reduce fear of Slenderman.

To reduce fear of Pennywise.

To reduce fear of mirrors in general.

To be able to enjoy trees without thinking bad things will happen - this is related to Slenderman too.

For Jackie to be able to understand and accept the word No.

To work toward Jackie sleeping in Jackie's own room - because then Jackie and parents at each of their respective houses will get better rest.

For Jackie to have more structure, start doing chores again, and earn allowances or other incentives.

We can use the plan we have in place (attached), and it wouldn't really have anything to do with the other therapies J is involved in. I made the goals and objectives simple to leave room for other work to be done with J's other therapists. I don't want to overwhelm her, nor overlap with other work she may be doing.

If the ROI's aren't completed, I am unable to speak to any of J's other therapists, or any other parties via call, text or email regarding J's treatment as it would be a violation of their privacy.

We can discuss this further on Thursday when we meet, but wanted to be clear about the treatment as it stands.

See you all Thursday!

Let me know if you have any questions.

Let me know your thoughts. This doesn't include any edits we discussed today, but I'd like your input regarding smaller tasks in completing objectives listed at bottom. Official copy will be finalized once discussing with my site supervisor.

Thanks!

Give yourself Grace as well.

Diagnosis and treatment plan

Diagnosis

- F43.22 - Adjustment disorder with anxiety
- H93.25 - Central auditory processing disorder
- F84.0 - Autistic disorder
- F90.9 - Attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder, unspecified type

Presenting Problem

Display of negative emotions, particularly anger and trouble identifying empathy.

Goal

To develop coping strategies for negative emotions; in particular anger, increase of emotional expression, increase in social cues and empathy.

Objective

Clients will use expressive arts mediums 1-2 times per month to explore emotions, particularly with anger, as well as empathy.

Clients will use mindfulness exercises 3-5 times per week to increase positive self talk, and work through negative emotions.

Treatment frequency: Weekly

Subject: Re: Need Copy of Treatment Plan Please - 2023-01-10

Hey, John! Thanks for reaching out.

There isn't a treatment plan in our system entered by Dani, as I'd look upon transitioning to myself, nor did she state having done one. Which is why I'd suggested creating one. I also didn't see a diagnosis entered into our system. After speaking with you all and you verbally giving me a diagnosis, and after looking through the notes in our system, I entered a diagnosis on December 2 of the following (also, one had to be created in order to bill for insurance):

Diagnosis:
F43.22 - Adjustment disorder with anxiety

Diagnosis:
H93.25 - Central auditory processing disorder

Two more diagnosis that have surfaced since Dec. second include the following (via you emailing/verbalizing):
ADHD and Autism Spectrum Disorder

I asked Dani today, and she told me that Theresa (who was her site supervisor) had created a treatment plan for JF. I have included her in this email to see if there is one in a hard copy file somewhere, as I have mentioned there isn't one in Simple Practice right now (again, which is why I was creating one).

Once we have a treatment plan, whether it is one Theresa has created or if we collaborate on one together, I do want to be clear about boundaries so that we are able to work effectively! :)

I will send a separate email so that we can begin that discussion. I want to support J in the most effective way possible, and I know working together we can totally achieve that!

Akhilah, could you please send me a copy of the treatment plan - I realize you only recently began seeing Jackie, so a copy of the plan that Dani had might be the best thing in the interim. I know you are still formulating a plan for Jackie at the moment.

If you can send it to me, and to Beatriz, it would be great appreciated.

I'm confident that you both will be great for Jackie. By the way, I found some 'spinners' at my parents house for the game that Jackie and you were working on, and will try to remember to send them with Jackie tonight when Jackie heads back to her mom's house.

I'm heading into my bankruptcy hearing shortly. Wish me luck please.

John

p.s. You may fax the treatment plan if that is easier, to 502.996.8246 (my personal fax number that I have for medical record transfer purposes). Whatever is easier for you. Also - you should already have paperwork on file that allows you, and Seven County Services, to exchange information freely...and if you need any other paperwork please let me know. Thank you.

I need to get the hell out of my parents house.

My dad was just very angry with me because I had a light on upstairs while I was carrying stuff down to the basement from the garage (from upstairs). The stairway is too dark for me to see otherwise and I have tripped on the stairs before while carrying things - keep in mind I have to wear flip-flops, and right now have a hurt right elbow/arm/nerve/cubital tunnel area... I cannot see when trying to walk down the stairs with my hands full in a dark room or hallway. And it isn't safe. I really don't believe that my parents would care if I fell and got hurt worse at this point - honestly.

Also - he was upset with me because I still had the door open that went from the garage to the house (not the garage door) but the interior door. I was trying to explain to him that I have an energy problem and that I may have to rest before I went back up the stairs for a few minutes. I have been carrying one box down...putting it away (which gives me time to catch my breath again, and then going back up to get another box).

He then blew up at me and told me he was not going to heat the outside. I tried to explain that what I have makes me very tired and I may have to rest - and he said he disagrees with my energy level....and then angrily left....

Now I feel that I cannot do anything at all (the overwhelmed switch got flipped or something)..that negativity drained whatever remaining energy I had...so I am going to try to get a doctor to write a letter about how devastating the fatigue can be, and random, for Sjogren's Disease from my rheumatologist I am seeing.

I am also going to ask my primary care physician and my gastroenterologist for letters about how profound the fatigue can be and how random it can hit. My dad said it wouldn't matter if I had doctors' letters, that he wouldn't believe me anyway, and he didn't care and disagrees about my health (because it is 'invisible illness')..

So I am basically asking you all to help me as much as you can to try to get some other place to be as it is not healthy for me to be here at all, nor is it healthy for Jackie.

I told him I understood why he wanted the door shut, he said he did not understand what I was saying and disagreed with my level of fatigue....but he is not living in my body - so that makes absolutely no sense - so what am I supposed to do with that?

My heart was in an AFib rhythm according to my smartwatch when I was packing up stuff - I told my mom I needed to rest because I felt very unwell....at that point in time....she said that she did not care....and that she was tired and had hired two 17 year olds to help move and she needed me to help right at that moment too, and that it was not okay for me to rest.....I had to rest anyway you all - I felt like I might die in that moment - that sounds extreme - but that is how unwell I felt and my heart was not beating right.

It is not okay with me to be emotionally abused at all - nor for Jackie to be - nor for it to happen every single day...

I need help to get me and Jackie to a safe place. I am totally exhausted. I am doing the best that I can do but there is zero understanding....literally zero.....less than zero.....

I don't know what I can do anymore. I've just declared bankruptcy - meeting of the creditors is Jan. 10th. Any landlord that checks my credit, due to the bankruptcy, will probably not allow me to stay there because I have a very low credit score presently due to the bankruptcy....I have been told that after the 10th of January....after the meeting of my creditors...and after the conclusion of the bankruptcy case, that I will have a higher score than I do right now. Before declaring bankruptcy I missed 4 payments on one card, and that sunk my score from fluctuating between 7xx and 6xx to 4xx. There was nothing I could do anyway though, because I could not afford to pay...hence the reason for the bankruptcy....

I am putting together a budget for you all to kind of see what I have going on.....it just is really upsetting to me that I am being treated in the ways that I am by my mother and father, and Jackie is being treated not right too.

Subject: I really need your all's help - 2023-01-04

I need to get the hell out of my parents house.

My dad was just very angry with me because I had a light on upstairs while I was carrying stuff down to the basement from the garage (from upstairs). The stairway is too dark for me to see otherwise and I have tripped on the stairs before while carrying things - keep in mind I have to wear flip-flops, and right now have a hurt right elbow/arm/nerve/cubital tunnel area... I cannot see when trying to walk down the stairs with my hands full in a dark room or hallway. And it isn't safe. I really don't believe that my parents would care if I fell and got hurt worse at this point - honestly.

Also - he was upset with me because I still had the door open that went from the garage to the house (not the garage door) but the interior door. I was trying to explain to him that I have an energy problem and that I may have to rest before I went back up the stairs for a few minutes. I have been carrying one box down...putting it away (which gives me time to catch my breath again, and then going back up to get another box).

He then blew up at me and told me he was not going to heat the outside. I tried to explain that what I have makes me very tired and I may have to rest - and he said he disagrees with my energy level....and then angrily left....

Now I feel that I cannot do anything at all (the overwhelmed switch got flipped or something)..that negativity drained whatever remaining energy I had...so I am going to try to get a doctor to write a letter about how devastating the fatigue can be, and random, for Sjogren's Disease from my rheumatologist I am seeing.

I am also going to ask my primary care physician and my gastroenterologist for letters about how profound the fatigue can be and how random it can hit. My dad said it wouldn't matter if I had doctors' letters, that he wouldn't believe me anyway, and he didn't care and disagrees about my health (because it is 'invisible illness')..

So I am basically asking you all to help me as much as you can to try to get some other place to be as it is not healthy for me to be here at all, nor is it healthy for Jackie.

I told him I understood why he wanted the door shut, he said he did not understand what I was saying and disagreed with my level of fatigue....but he is not living in my body - so that makes absolutely no sense - so what am I supposed to do with that?

My heart was in an AFib rhythm according to my smartwatch when I was packing up stuff - I told my mom I needed to rest because I felt very unwell....at that point in time....she said that she did not care....and that she was tired and had hired two 17 year olds to help move and she needed me to help right at that moment too, and that it was not okay for me to rest.....I had to rest anyway you all - I felt like I might die in that moment - that sounds extreme - but that is how unwell I felt and my heart was not beating right.

It is not okay with me to be emotionally abused at all - nor for Jackie to be - nor for it to happen every single day...

I need help to get me and Jackie to a safe place. I am totally exhausted. I am doing the best that I can do but there is zero understanding....literally zero.....less than zero.....

I don't know what I can do anymore. I've just declared bankruptcy - meeting of the creditors is Jan. 10th. Any landlord that checks my credit, due to the bankruptcy, will probably not allow me to stay there because I have a very low credit score presently due to the bankruptcy....I have been told that after the 10th of January....after the meeting of my creditors...and after the conclusion of the bankruptcy case, that I will have a higher score than I do right now. Before declaring bankruptcy I missed 4 payments on one card, and that sunk my score from fluctuating between 7xx and 6xx to 4xx. There was nothing I could do anyway though, because I could not afford to pay...hence the reason for the bankruptcy....

I am putting together a budget for you all to kind of see what I have going on.....it just is really upsetting to me that I am being treated in the ways that I am by my mother and father, and Jackie is being treated not right too.

Hey! Sorry for replying so late. I hear what you're saying. I would definitely like to address any behavior that may be troubling, especially if you see it's not serving J, or yourself well. I think it may be helpful to write this out, and address it together when we meet. Maybe it would help to map out clear consequences? If you'd like to talk it over a bit before we meet, I am available earlier in the day on Thursday (before noon). Or, I can map out a basic structure and then talk it over the first half of session. I still want to cover ground rules together with J, and give her a chance to map out some boundaries as well.

I'm here to support! I will talk it over with my supervisor as well, Em, and Theresa. They may have more insight to offer as well.

Jackie will just deny it and state that I am doing that to Jackie when I am not (again - classic narcissistic behavior)....I am not able to handle being treated like that so do not know what to do and am desperate for some help. My mom gaslights me constantly and denies it and I am living in her home now.....I cannot handle being treated that way from multiple family members all the time - it makes it unsafe for me.

Hey! I hope you all have had a Happy Holiday, and a Happy New Year so far!

I wanted to touch base, as I have received all of your info over the break and will be looking through it to see if I can provide any assistance in that area. We can touch base on all this when we meet.

I greatly appreciate the JCPS info as well. This could be helpful in creating an effective treatment plan for JaF. I certainly would like to work together with you on this.

I know Simple Practice will send out a reminder, but just wanted to say I'm looking forward to seeing you all this Thursday at 7:30 pm.

Unless anything changes, see you all then!

I know we didn't get a chance to discuss this today, but here is a link regarding getting a passport for a minor. I don't mind bringing this up with mom as well, next time I meet with her, and we can discuss how you would like to be supported regarding this.

Subject: Info on ACT (Acceptance and Commitment Therapy)

I wanted to provide you with some info on this, as well. This is a method I often implement with a lot of my clients, in conjunction with different expressive arts modalities. Just wanted to let you have a look at it and see what you think.You can look up for yourself how this works with individuals with autism, as a solution focused therapy.

Feel free to reach out if you have questions, we can also talk more about it in January :)

Hey! I just heard in the news it's a road advisory bc the conditions are going to be so bad. I had a wreck last year so I definitely don't want to risk that again, nor have you all make that risk as well.

With that being said, Do you want to do a telehealth? Or would you like to just call this a cancel and see you all in January?

Just an FYI, here are the times I still have available:

Thursdays (evenings at Frankfort, mornings can be at either Fra. or Prtl.)
9:30 am - _____
10:30 am - _____
11:30 am - _____
12:30 pm - _____
1:30 pm - _____
4:30 pm - (biweekly)/ _____
5:30 pm - (biweekly)/ _____
6:30 pm - (biweekly)/ _____
7:30 pm - _____

Fridays (Portland):
10:30 am - _____

I know you had previously done earlier in the day, so I'm happy to say next semester I could accommodate the earlier times as I will not be returning to my previous day job to do counseling full time 😊

Hey! I sent you a text to see if you have any brief time today to speak with you for a bit? I was in the process of creating "goal sheets" for you to maybe take home, but wanted to get your take on it first. If today is no good, no worries! Just let me know when would be a good time for you so I can touch base before the holidays. If all else, I could always mail/email things to you that you could potentially have at home as well.

Hope to hear from you soon, and hope you are having a good week!

I am honestly at a loss a lot of the time because it seems like there is behavior that needs modification, but consequences don't work, because if there are consequences, then I end up in a land of emotional dysregulation with Jackie for days sometimes and there seems to be a lack of understanding of how the consequence applies to the behavior, or a total lack of self awareness which I am sure is an autism thing, but I need some guidance around some situations please, and the videos are a good way to get that (video part isn't really relevant it is just the audio). May I send you some of those files? I will cut them down to size to being only the relevant parts - maybe 3 or 4 of them? I also understand if that is too much to ask! Just let me know.

Sorry for my late response, I had clients late again yesterday.

Sure! That would be cool if you sent them to me. I understand, I definitely hear you wanting to find some tools that could work for the both of you at home. I will have some things to bring during session that you can either take home, or I can email. I may reach out to you via phone one day next week as well, if that is okay, after our session with mom. Just to get some input, and maybe offer any insight I might have. Would that be alright as well?

Let me know your thoughts, thanks!

I am honestly at a loss a lot of the time because it seems like there is behavior that needs modification, but consequences don't work, because if there are consequences, then I end up in a land of emotional dysregulation with Jackie for days sometimes and there seems to be a lack of understanding of how the consequence applies to the behavior, or a total lack of self awareness which I am sure is an autism thing, but I need some guidance around some situations please, and the videos are a good way to get that (video part isn't really relevant it is just the audio). May I send you some of those files? I will cut them down to size to being only the relevant parts - maybe 3 or 4 of them? I also understand if that is too much to ask! Just let me know.

Also, can you please, then with the holiday schedule included, send us both a full schedule - at least through the holidays - so we can see what days are off days for you at L.E.T.?

Lindsay's email address is: lindsayfoutscpa@gmail.com. Her phone number is (502) 475-6897. Email is probably the best way to reach her - or text msg.

You already know mine, but I am listing here just for the sake of completeness. My email address is Fouts.John@gmail.com and my phone number is (502) 956-0052.

Jackie really enjoyed meeting with you last night and is already excited about playing hockey again with you next week!

Jackie also is dealing with Long Covid symptoms specifically of fatigue, shortness of breath, and short term memory loss. Other concerns are those of autism spectrum disorder level 2, adhd, suicidal ideation, no ability to have consequences for actions, extreme regression in many areas, and I don't know why, and more. Goals I would like for Jackie to have are to reduce levels of anxiety and fears (e.g. I cannot even go to the bathroom on my own without Jackie right next to me because Jackie has such fears) - an example is a fear of Slender Man...Jackie is no longer able to sleep in Jackie's own room although Jackie did from ages 6 to 10...just a couple examples there. Jackie used to know about people's bubbles and not to get into them and not to interpret conversations constantly, but somehow Jackie has not been using these skills - and I am not exactly certain as to what is going on. I want Jackie to learn how to create happiness from within, to be a self-sufficient adult as much as possible one day, and to be able to receive and give love with as much robustness as possible for Jackie and for those in Jackie's life both now and in the future. Jackie is a very creative and artistic child with a unique way of communicating. It is not always easy to get out of Jackie what Jackie needs or wants - so communicating clearly and effectively should be a goal (as it should be for all of us!)...just saying all humans could probably use help in that area.

I'll sit in for 15 or 20 minutes maybe of the first session - Jackie is always saying that Jackie needs all the time and I don't want to interfere with Jackie's needs. You seemed very nice and kind in the short time I got to meet you. Looking forward to seeing you soon for Jackie.

If you like, could you possibly sit in on the first part of our session, just so we can sort of talk for a bit and address any concerns you might have? I know it is late, and appreciate you being able to make the scheduling adjustment so we could make it work.

Again, I have looked through you alls notes so I can get better acclimated to what you all have been working towards, but definitely would like to speak about it in person so we can be on the same page about what is best for Jackie.

Let me know your thoughts!

I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
> For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

Is there a plan now or at any time in the future for a therapist to be able to travel to a client's home? Jackie has become more and more and more defiant and resentful with contempt toward me because I am the only one that takes Jackie to appointments....and I don't know what to do to fix the problem...

Jackie said the Portland office looked 'too fancy'..

Also of note, for some reason this week, Jackie has had extreme sensitivity issues...to light...sound...light touch...'grease on Jackie's fingers'...even after washing hands repeatedly...all as reported by Jackie.

I cced Dani on this email bc I wanted to ask her a few questions too.

Dani....

Did you get a chance to talk with Jackie about how transition of therapists work? I think Jackie is angry with me partly because she won't be able to see you anymore after next time. How do I handle that anger?

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.
Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Other concerns are those of autism spectrum disorder level 2, adhd, suicidal ideation, no ability to have consequences for actions, extreme regression in many areas, and I don't know why, and more. Goals I would like for Jackie to have are to reduce levels of anxiety and fears (e.g. I cannot even go to the bathroom on my own without Jackie right next to me because Jackie has such fears) - an example is a fear of Slender Man...Jackie is no longer able to sleep in Jackie's own room although Jackie did from ages 6 to 10...just a couple examples there. Jackie used to know about people's bubbles and not to get into them and not to interpret conversations constantly, but somehow Jackie has not been using these skills - and I am not exactly certain as to what is going on. I want Jackie to learn how to create happiness from within, to be a self-sufficient adult as much as possible one day, and to be able to receive and give love with as much robustness as possible for Jackie and for those in Jackie's life both now and in the future. Jackie is a very creative and artistic child with a unique way of communicating. I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
> For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

Is there a plan now or at any time in the future for a therapist to be able to travel to a client's home? Jackie has become more and more and more defiant and resentful with contempt toward me because I am the only one that takes Jackie to appointments....and I don't know what to do to fix the problem...

Jackie said the Portland office looked 'too fancy'..

Also of note, for some reason this week, Jackie has had extreme sensitivity issues...to light...sound...light touch...'grease on Jackie's fingers'...even after washing hands repeatedly...all as reported by Jackie.

I cced Dani on this email bc I wanted to ask her a few questions too.

Dani....

Did you get a chance to talk with Jackie about how transition of therapists work? I think Jackie is angry with me partly because she won't be able to see you anymore after next time. How do I handle that anger?

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.
Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Hi Akhilah!

Happy Saturday! There are a lot of concerns - I've listed a few here... Jackie has several physical health ailments that are similar to those that I have. Jackie also is dealing with Long Covid symptoms specifically of fatigue, shortness of breath, and short term memory loss. Other concerns are those of autism spectrum disorder level 2, adhd, suicidal ideation, no ability to have consequences for actions, extreme regression in many areas, and I don't know why, and more. Goals I would like for Jackie to have are to reduce levels of anxiety and fears (e.g. I cannot even go to the bathroom on my own without Jackie right next to me because Jackie has such fears) - an example is a fear of Slender Man...Jackie is no longer able to sleep in Jackie's own room although Jackie did from ages 6 to 10...just a couple examples there. Jackie used to know about people's bubbles and not to get into them and not to interpret conversations constantly, but somehow Jackie has not been using these skills - and I am not exactly certain as to what is going on. I want Jackie to learn how to create happiness from within, to be a self-sufficient adult as much as possible one day, and to be able to receive and give love with as much robustness as possible for Jackie and for those in Jackie's life both now and in the future. Jackie is a very creative and artistic child with a unique way of communicating. It is not always easy to get out of Jackie what Jackie needs or wants - so communicating clearly and effectively should be a goal (as it should be for all of us!)...just saying all humans could probably use help in that area.

I'll sit in for 15 or 20 minutes maybe of the first session - Jackie is always saying that Jackie needs all the time and I don't want to interfere with Jackie's needs. You seemed very nice and kind in the short time I got to meet you. Looking forward to seeing you soon for Jackie.

For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

Dani and Akhilah,

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.
> Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
> Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

I want to create a treatment plan (to at least have a guideline for what we will be doing), but I know J is seeing a few other therapists as well? Would you all be willing to do an ROI form for me to communicate with them? No worries at all if you don't.

Hi Akhilah!

Happy Saturday! There are a lot of concerns - I've listed a few here... Jackie has several physical health ailments that are similar to those that I have. Jackie also is dealing with Long Covid symptoms specifically of fatigue, shortness of breath, and short term memory loss. Other concerns are those of autism spectrum disorder level 2, adhd, suicidal ideation, no ability to have consequences for actions, extreme regression in many areas, and I don't know why, and more. Goals I would like for Jackie to have are to reduce levels of anxiety and fears (e.g. I cannot even go to the bathroom on my own without Jackie right next to me because Jackie has such fears) - an example is a fear of Slender Man...Jackie is no longer able to sleep in Jackie's own room although Jackie did from ages 6 to 10...just a couple examples there. Jackie used to know about people's bubbles and not to get into them and not to interpret conversations constantly, but somehow Jackie has not been using these skills - and I am not exactly certain as to what is going on. I want Jackie to learn how to create happiness from within, to be a self-sufficient adult as much as possible one day, and to be able to receive and give love with as much robustness as possible for Jackie and for those in Jackie's life both now and in the future. Jackie is a very creative and artistic child with a unique way of communicating. It is not always easy to get out of Jackie what Jackie needs or wants - so communicating clearly and effectively should be a goal (as it should be for all of us!)...just saying all humans could probably use help in that area.

I'll sit in for 15 or 20 minutes maybe of the first session - Jackie is always saying that Jackie needs all the time and I don't want to interfere with Jackie's needs. You seemed very nice and kind in the short time I got to meet you. Looking forward to seeing you soon for Jackie.

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

Dani and Akhilah,

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.
> Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.

Hey! Thanks for this info. My day time job is as the accessibility services coordinator at a college, so I am pretty familiar with long COVID and it's effects, as well as am I familiar with ASD (and SPD).

We can definitely address your concerns, as I want to be as supportive as I can through this process. I want to create a treatment plan (to at least have a guideline for what we will be doing), but I know J is seeing a few other therapists as well? Would you all be willing to do an ROI form for me to communicate with them? No worries at all if you don't.

Either way, looking forward to collaborating with you all!

Hi Akhilah!

Happy Saturday! There are a lot of concerns - I've listed a few here... Jackie has several physical health ailments that are similar to those that I have. Jackie also is dealing with Long Covid symptoms specifically of fatigue, shortness of breath, and short term memory loss. Other concerns are those of autism spectrum disorder level 2, adhd, suicidal ideation, no ability to have consequences for actions, extreme regression in many areas, and I don't know why, and more. Goals I would like for Jackie to have are to reduce levels of anxiety and fears (e.g. I cannot even go to the bathroom on my own without Jackie right next to me because Jackie has such fears) - an example is a fear of Slender Man...Jackie is no longer able to sleep in Jackie's own room although Jackie did from ages 6 to 10...just a couple examples there. Jackie used to know about people's bubbles and not to get into them and not to interpret conversations constantly, but somehow Jackie has not been using these skills - and I am not exactly certain as to what is going on. I want Jackie to learn how to create happiness from within, to be a self-sufficient adult as much as possible one day, and to be able to receive and give love with as much robustness as possible for Jackie and for those in Jackie's life both now and in the future. Jackie is a very creative and artistic child with a unique way of communicating. It is not always easy to get out of Jackie what Jackie needs or wants - so communicating clearly and effectively should be a goal (as it should be for all of us!)...just saying all humans could probably use help in that area.

I'll sit in for 15 or 20 minutes maybe of the first session - Jackie is always saying that Jackie needs all the time and I don't want to interfere with Jackie's needs. You seemed very nice and kind in the short time I got to meet you. Looking forward to seeing you soon for Jackie.

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Dani and Akhilah,

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

Hi John,

I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below.
Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Hey! Thanks for this info. My day time job is as the accessibility services coordinator at a college, so I am pretty familiar with long COVID and it's effects, as well as am I familiar with ASD (and SPD).

We can definitely address your concerns, as I want to be as supportive as I can through this process. I want to create a treatment plan (to at least have a guideline for what we will be doing), but I know J is seeing a few other therapists as well? Would you all be willing to do an ROI form for me to communicate with them? No worries at all if you don't.

Either way, looking forward to collaborating with you all!

Hi Akhilah!

Happy Saturday! There are a lot of concerns - I've listed a few here... Jackie has several physical health ailments that are similar to those that I have. Jackie also is dealing with Long Covid symptoms specifically of fatigue, shortness of breath, and short term memory loss. Other concerns are those of autism spectrum disorder level 2, adhd, suicidal ideation, no ability to have consequences for actions, extreme regression in many areas, and I don't know why, and more. Goals I would like for Jackie to have are to reduce levels of anxiety and fears (e.g. I cannot even go to the bathroom on my own without Jackie right next to me because Jackie has such fears) - an example is a fear of Slender Man...Jackie is no longer able to sleep in Jackie's own room although Jackie did from ages 6 to 10...just a couple examples there. Jackie used to know about people's bubbles and not to get into them and not to interpret conversations constantly, but somehow Jackie has not been using these skills - and I am not exactly certain as to what is going on. I want Jackie to learn how to create happiness from within, to be a self-sufficient adult as much as possible one day, and to be able to receive and give love with as much robustness as possible for Jackie and for those in Jackie's life both now and in the future. Jackie is a very creative and artistic child with a unique way of communicating. It is not always easy to get out of Jackie what Jackie needs or wants - so communicating clearly and effectively should be a goal (as it should be for all of us!)...just saying all humans could probably use help in that area.

I'll sit in for 15 or 20 minutes maybe of the first session - Jackie is always saying that Jackie needs all the time and I don't want to interfere with Jackie's needs. You seemed very nice and kind in the short time I got to meet you. Looking forward to seeing you soon for Jackie.

Again, I have looked through you alls notes so I can get better acclimated to what you all have been working towards, but definitely would like to speak about it in person so we can be on the same page about what is best for Jackie.

Let me know your thoughts!

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Thanks so much! I love big earrings :)

If you like, could you possibly sit in on the first part of our session, just so we can sort of talk for a bit and address any concerns you might have? I know it is late, and appreciate you being able to make the scheduling adjustment so we could make it work.

Again, I have looked through you alls notes so I can get better acclimated to what you all have been working towards, but definitely would like to speak about it in person so we can be on the same page about what is best for Jackie.

Let me know your thoughts!

I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

Hey, John! Great seeing you all today :)

I just wanted to send a follow up email to the conversation we had at the end of Ja's session. I would officially meet with Ja on 12/8 at 7:30pm in the Frankfort Ave Office location. Here is a calendar of the remaining time for this year, and days we would have for next year. I don't anticipate anything will change, but I will keep you updated if I need to cancel for any reason (medical reasons, etc.).

I have made note of everything you mentioned in your last few emails, as well as will I be going over the notes from you and Dani's past sessions so I can get a little more familiar with Ja and how I will be able to better assist in our sessions.

Please let me know if you have any further questions, and we can definitely talk more next week!

JaF Fall 2022 Schedule

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

> Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.
> Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
> Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

I wanted to reach out and state that Akhilah will be unable to attend in person tomorrow due to her other job needing her during JaF and my appointment time. I have asked Akhilah if she has 10 minutes to talk toward the end of the session, we could potentially meet via google meet. However, please inform JaF that Akhilah will not be present due to her other commitments. Please emphasize journaling, drawing, doing a puzzle, or playing a game to assist them if they become angered, or finding something to calm them down before communicating with you.

Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Dani and Akhilah,

Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

Hi John,

I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Hi John,

I wanted to respond to your email from the 23rd and assist with a couple of the questions that you provided for me! First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

Is there a plan now or at any time in the future for a therapist to be able to travel to a client's home? Jackie has become more and more and more defiant and resentful with contempt toward me because I am the only one that takes Jackie to appointments....and I don't know what to do to fix the problem...

Jackie said the Portland office looked 'too fancy'..

Also of note, for some reason this week, Jackie has had extreme sensitivity issues...to light...sound...light touch...'grease on Jackie's fingers'...even after washing hands repeatedly...all as reported by Jackie.

I cced Dani on this email bc I wanted to ask her a few questions too.

Dani....

Did you get a chance to talk with Jackie about how transition of therapists work? I think Jackie is angry with me partly because she won't be able to see you anymore after next time. How do I handle that anger?

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! Thanks for writing. Jackie is hoping to see you in person tomorrow Dani - it would be better for Jackie - Jackie voiced today how much she 'hates to be with me' because it is her mother's week and she is 'stuck' with me for school while her mom is at work on her mom's weeks. We need a solution but don't have one. It shouldn't be my responsibility to figure out a solution for Jackie's mother's weeks for Jackie - but alas - it falls on my shoulders...and I have no solution...

Regarding the number of appointments - there are already too many - Jackie has to come with me to mine as well because there is not care available aside from me taking care of Jackie.

Akhilah - I am hoping maybe Jackie can meet with you while in person with Dani tomorrow - please let me know Dani.

Regarding OT - this is already in progress - we are on a waiting list and trying to get it set up right next to speech therapy and at the same place (Kids Center).

ABA was supposed to start this week....but the therapist decided it wasn't going to work out at the last minute so we are on a waiting list again....ABA has to be 'at a minimum' 12 hours per week. Jackie's mom would only commit to 9, and I have 12 for Jackie....they wanted us to do 25 hours per week but it was not feasible...

Thanks for the recommendations! Let me know if it can be in person tomorrow please, and thanks for everything as always!!

Hi John,

I wanted to reach out and provide a plan of transition after I leave December 2nd, and some recommendations that I have that can be done in the future for JaF!

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.

Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Hey again, John!

I totally understand and hear your concerns. Here is a short video link to the Portland location and a few pics if you'd like to check it out! Everyone really seems to enjoy this space.
https://youtu.be/tKDQ07XC2Rk

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

First, JaF will be meeting Akhilah tomorrow via zoom with me so that we can get to know them and see if they enjoy talking with them and working with them before my last day on December 2nd. I have attached Akhilah's information in cc'ing them if you have questions for them before the session tomorrow. If JaF enjoys their rapport with Akhilah, then JaF will be transitioned to their caseload. Please feel free to contact Akhilah, or Akhilah feel free to contact John so that you can go ahead and start scheduling after December 2nd!

Secondly, after discussing JaF in supervision, I have a list of recommendations that I think would increase JaF's therapeutic growth in the future. My first recommendation is to potentially see an occupational therapist. However, I know we had discussed them seeing an ABA a couple times a week, so this should help enormously. So this can be placed on hold, and see what the ABA's referral can also be.
Another suggestion to increase social skills, and assist them with growth in the environment outside of the home is getting involved in clubs such as technology clubs, specialty programs for kids with autism, and even going to specialized public schooling. I have found a school called the Phoneix school in which assists children in middle school and high school with learning differences, but providing a smaller class size with other similar students to provide that 1:1 individualized teaching style. I will be attaching links to my recommendations below. Even later in life they have programs such as the college of living or day programs that JaF can attend when they become 18 to increase their social growth.
Lastly, I would look later into family therapy for you and JaF to attend, many of the autism specialty programs offered have parent classes and different therapies provided to help the family unit to assist in their child's growth! As well, 7 counties provide family therapy, and this might be another avenue to look into due to you and JaF connection with their talk therapist there.

However, I would caution against having too many appointments to where JaF can become overstimulated, and could result in more angered outbursts at home.

I look forward to my last sessions with JaF, and will see you tomorrow.

Sincerely,
Danielle Creamer

Great question how you pronounce Ahkilah's name is (Ah-kee-lah), and I can also provide a line of contact for them once they meet JaF. For JaF contacting me after our time together, I will have a discussion with my supervisor as to how to have this conversation with JaF. Due to my time ending with JaF, I will no longer have contact information with them such as email, phone number, etc. Therefore, there will not be be a line accessible for me to be reached at. However, I can have this conversation with JaF in a different way to explore change, transition, and how we can overcome this challenge.

I told Jackie I appreciated that that was possible - to voice that out loud - and that I was proud of Jackie for realizing and acknowledging this. I also told Jackie that it is hard on me to absorb that negative energy (because it really is - it did not used to be)...before I got really sick it was not a big issue...but now...it is...so it is something that we need to work on...

First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
> > For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

because I am the only one that takes Jackie to appointments....and I don't know what to do to fix the problem...

Jackie said the Portland office looked 'too fancy'..

Also of note, for some reason this week, Jackie has had extreme sensitivity issues...to light...sound...light touch...'grease on Jackie's fingers'...even after washing hands repeatedly...all as reported by Jackie.

I cced Dani on this email bc I wanted to ask her a few questions too.

Dani....

Did you get a chance to talk with Jackie about how transition of therapists work? I think Jackie is angry with me partly because she won't be able to see you anymore after next time. How do I handle that anger?

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

Do you have a contact at The Phoenix School that I can reach our to? And do you know if in school therapy is offered, or if there are any hybrid home and school portions of programs there? The Novak Center Infectious Disease doctor told us Jackue needs to focus more on rest and less on school, but I have already lessened the school stuff in large majority and from Jackie I usually only get complaints, hate, how much Jackie says Jackie does not want to be anywhere near me, etc...and I need to protect my own mental health which is fragile already from living in burning alive pain for almost 14 years now...and because I am sensitive in general.

We're you able to find out if the surface anger was more deeply rooted and tied to something else?

I told Jackie earlier today that it is a hard day for me because in 2006, one of my best friends hung himself on Nov. 23rd. To that, Jackie replied, 'what would you do if I ran away and never had to see you again...'....I mean I feel like Jackie has list empathy too and it deeply concerns me.

As far as keeping the same time, I am able to do 11:30 am on Saturday, as I know them and Dani have been meeting during the day around the time. I could not do this during the week, though, as I work another full time job during the day.

With regards to remaining at the Frankfort location, I unfortunately only could do that on Thursdays at 7:30 pm as I have now transitioned all of my clients to this location minus this day/time (Thursdays at 7:30).

If you would be interested in maybe taking the Saturday 11:30 am - 12:20 pm slot, I could definitely write you all in and plan to meet with you all and Dani at your last session in a December! If not, I totally understand if this won't work out. No pressure at all. If need be, LET could place you on the waitlist until another time slot opens up? Or you and Dani could discuss referral info.

Let me know what your thoughts are :)

Hi Akhilah,

Thanks for listing out your times. I am glad that you were able to meet Jackie. Jackie seemed to like you - so that is a good start/sign. This might seem like a very weird question, but do you have any pictures of the 1215 Portland Ave location? I ask for multiple reasons - but here are a couple - Jackie has a lot of trouble with transitions and transitioning therapists - and - locations - might be a bit too much at once for Jackie. Jackie has grown to love the Frankfort Ave location, but there is no way I can accommodate the times you are available there. I really need to keep the time slot that we have for Jackie - is that time available at Portland? We have so many appointments that it is very difficult to make any changes. And with adding in 12 hours of ABA therapy in addition to so many others, it is just a large challenge...and Jackie's mother doesn't take Jackie to appointments - so my weeks are very hectic.... and I have a major energy deficit (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome) and Complex Regional Pain Syndrome and Small Fiber Polyneuropathy and etc....basically it is also hard for me to get around...and I have been having even a harder time as the days go by and weeks go by....so basically - need to know mainly if can keep same time slot if at the Portland location?

John (Jackie's dad)

p.s. I think it is important that you sit in on the last session with Jackie if at all possible.

Good afternoon, John!

It was really great to meet with J today :)

I just wanted to be sure you had a bit more info on my end, so that you are able to see what works best for you and J moving forward with their transitioning from Dani.

I believe that you all have been originally meeting during the day on Thursdays. I am taking clients during the day at our new Portland location (1215 Portland Ave, Louisville, KY 40203). However, I am only seeing clients during the week after 5:30 pm at the Frankfort Ave location. I have included my current availability below...

Available Times/ Days:
Thursdays - 5:30 pm (biweekly available), 6:30 pm, and 8:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Fridays - 6:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available), and 7:30 pm (weekly/ biweekly available)
Saturdays - 9:30 am (weekly), 10:30 am (biweekly available), 11:30 am (weekly)

If any of this works, you are more than welcome to call/txt me at 502-512-8522 and we can chat about it! You are welcome to text me at the number as well. Also, if any of the times would work moving forward, we could talk about transitioning sooner if that is something you are looking to do, or me sitting in on the last session with Dani before transitioning.

If none of this works, that is okay as well, I respect whatever decision it is that you make.

Hope to hear from you! Thanks for letting me meet J today, they are an awesome kid!

First, I did talk about the transition with JaF and that we cannot be "angry" with someone if they have no control over the situation and stated that you had nothing to do with my leaving or JaF. JaF replied and stated that "I will miss you", and therefore I think some of the anger about the transition is the thought of leaving and being sad about the loss. JaF also has became resistive and avoidant in talking about "hard emotions", so often it is a dance to pull some of these things out. However, it takes time and continuation to see improvement.
> > For helping with change, I have a lot of resources that can be beneficial for JaF and help them process adjustment and change. That I will attach at the end of the email. Provide an open conversation about change and how JaF has done this before with moving from different states, starting homeschool, and even working with me after meeting with T for a while. Encourage their resiliency and how they can overcome this obstacle. Stating facts to JaF about the situation is also very important. I provided JaF that my internship is ending and that I am planning to stay in Lexington due to being close to home. For the anger, explain that with change can come anger and we can be angry about the situation, however, we can not be angry forever or take this anger out on the ones we love. Talk about ways to transform the anger whether it be through art, building, and something they enjoy.

For the Phoenix school, the last email with the links at the bottom has the contact information for the school when you click on the page so that they can assist you any way they can! For counseling services, I assume there are counselors on staff, however, I would ask this directly with the school administration.

For anger, JaF hinted about being angry about being taken to appointments consistently, which is kind of what we had discussed at their session on Tuesday. Providing a structure so that you do not have dual roles of teacher and dad. I think the school would provide JaF the opportunity to have space to interact with friends, and teachers, and learn. In return, it would give you a break so that you can go to appointments and not have the dual role of teacher. However, diving deeper to find the root of anger would take more time in therapy and sessions. Oftentimes, it is like taking a wall down a brick at a time, rather than bulldozing it down.

For empathy, I would not go to the conclusion that JaF has lost empathy. Due to JaF being neurodivergent, JaF reponse to social situations can be different than other individuals. JaF could potentially not have known how to react in that situation, and that then led to the response of running away. Next time this shows up, discuss your emotions attached to this situation and explore how JaF would react in a certain situation and how they would feel. I have attached an article that is very helpful in discussing Autism and empathy. I am also attaching how to increase empathy in the home.

because I am the only one that takes Jackie to appointments....and I don't know what to do to fix the problem...

Jackie said the Portland office looked 'too fancy'..

Also of note, for some reason this week, Jackie has had extreme sensitivity issues...to light...sound...light touch...'grease on Jackie's fingers'...even after washing hands repeatedly...all as reported by Jackie.

I cced Dani on this email bc I wanted to ask her a few questions too.

Dani....

Did you get a chance to talk with Jackie about how transition of therapists work? I think Jackie is angry with me partly because she won't be able to see you anymore after next time. How do I handle that anger?

How am I to handle the anger and resentment Jackie has toward me because I am the parent that actually takes care of Jackie?

What was discussed:

- Feelings Wheel Check in (at beginning and end of session)
- Clients treatment plan goals
- Goals J and Dad came up with outside of session
- Wanting to get to know J one on one
- J Book of Activities
- Session Structure
- Catastrophic language (ex: you want me to die, you drink 9 bottles a day) as brought up last week's session as a parent concern

Activities:

- Client was given a laminated daily task sheet, to break goals into smaller tasks
- Client led a drawing activity

See you next session.

Let me know your thoughts. This doesn't include any edits we discussed today, but I'd like your input regarding smaller tasks in completing objectives listed at bottom. Official copy will be finalized once discussing with my site supervisor.

Thanks!

Give yourself Grace as well.

Diagnosis and treatment plan

Diagnosis

- F43.22 - Adjustment disorder with anxiety
- H93.25 - Central auditory processing disorder
- F84.0 - Autistic disorder
- F90.9 - Attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder, unspecified type

Presenting Problem

Display of negative emotions, particularly anger and trouble identifying empathy.

Goal

To develop coping strategies for negative emotions; in particular anger, increase of emotional expression, increase in social cues and empathy.

Objective

Clients will use expressive arts mediums 1-2 times per month to explore emotions, particularly with anger, as well as empathy.

Clients will use mindfulness exercises 3-5 times per week to increase positive self talk, and work through negative emotions.

Treatment frequency: Weekly

Q1 Why do you think The Phoenix would be a good fit for your student?- The Phoenix would be a good fit for Jackie because it seems like the staff and leadership is far more well versed in neuro-divergent children and children dealing with trauma than in other JCPS schools. Also, previously, at Bloom, 504 plan items were being largely ignored - even after being pointed out and going to the Superintendent's office, and this was not okay. It seems like The Phoenix would allow for an exceptional positive transformation for Jackie's educational future.

Q2 Why would your student be successful in a blended (traditional & online) and self-directed learning environment? - Jackie would be successful in a blended-learning environment because we know, historically, that Jackie can succeed with NTI and at an in-school environment when proper resources are provided and proper instruction is given. Jackie would be successful with self-directed learning because interest and buy-in to what any human being learns makes learning less of a task and more of a fun experience.

Q3. What are your student's strengths and challenges - Strengths: Intelligent / Empathetic / Kind / Compassionate / Caring / Creative / Artistic / Assertive / Vocal / Loquacious Weaknesses: Memory challenges / Autism traits / Recall issues / Social and Emotional Cue Recognition and Awareness

Comments - If any of Jackie's information is needed, please reach out to me in terms of Autism Spectrum Disorder Level 2 Diagnosis, Auditory Processing Disorder diagnosis or any other diagnoses that may be necessary for application.

Subject: Some of other things....

Thought of these after you had left, but still relevant.

In 2022, Jackie's then PCP, Dr. Mahajan, at Norton, had told us that Jackie was exhibiting symptoms of Long Covid, and Jackie was indeed....especially with an exacerbation of pain, exacerbation of headaches, newer onset worse short term memory (which Dr. Mahajan had said she'd seen in a number of children), and extreme fatigue. She had us go to a Cardiologist, to Physical Rehabilitation Medicine, and Pulmonology for Jackie. Jackie already has established care at a Family Allergy and Asthma practice. Jackie already sees a Neurologist - Dr. Rogers at Norton, Gastroenterologist - Dr. Stocker or NP Lindsay McElmurray at U of L Motility Department....Jackie was first diagnosed with Gastroparesis around the age of 3 or 4 I think...that was a long time ago...the diagnosis was done at Cincinnati Children's Hospital using the gold standard test....the nuclear imaging looking for delayed gastric emptying....Jackie has delayed gastric emptying in phases 2 and 4 of digestion according to that test.....I have had Jackie in therapy since Jackie was a small child because I always knew something was not the same as other children....

Jackie was very sensitive, and still is, to light at times...to sound....sensory inputs....Jackie saw Dr. Tonya Stockhammer (Psychologist at StrongMinds) when Jackie was 5 or 6....prior to that...Jackie saw Dr. Lara West in Corydon....Dr. Stockhammer advised us to see Dr. Judith Axelrod at SquareOne MD (one of the best physicians / developmental pediatricians in the region)....Dr. Axelrod confirmed ADHD when Jackie was 6 I believe...Jackie was in therapy at school that I had arranged in 2019 or 2020. I had asked also, if Jackie could be seen by an in-school therapist...and...by an out of school therapist...because Jackie was struggling with some things (and weren't we all....it was the time of the great pandemic of COVID)...which was not so great a time. I was able to get that set up through Seven Counties...so Jackie was seeing Ms. Sanchez at school...and was seeing Lindsey Smith outside of school, so was having therapy sessions 2 times per week...this went on into 2022...at which time, Jackie began being homeschooled - on 2/22/2022 (easy date to remember at least)... Jackie had been having issues with migraines, cluster headaches, and cyclical vomiting syndrome in addition to her anxiety and depression. She was also struggling with pain issues and invisible disability issues....Jackie was seeing Lindsey Smith well into 2022 (I believe through the end of the year)...Jackie had also been enrolled in Art Therapy as of then. Jack was in art therapy through Louisville Expressive Therapies from around August 2022 through February 2023.

At L.E.T., Jackie initially saw Theresa Adamchik, later Dani Creamer (intern), and after that saw Akilah Cherry. Jackie enjoyed art therapy, but Akhilah said she was not able to continue seeing Jackie due to not feeling comfortable dealing with transgender issues which she had not been trained on if I remember correctly - or maybe was just not comfortable tackling transgenderism with everything else.

So Lindsey Smith had left Seven Counties, and Akilah had not felt comfortable with gender affirming therapy, nor was she able to provide what was needed for Jackie to begin receiving appropriate transgender care -- we needed a specific letter from a gender-affirming therapy group to be able to get

Jackie into the P.A.G.E. clinic at the NOVAK Center downtown (specialized in Endocrinology, etc....)...oh...at the end of 2022 and in the Summer 2022...and maybe even somewhat earlier in the year, I had also finally been able to get Jackie into ABA therapy...which was recommended for Jackie since Jackie was younger...

When Jackie was younger...it was not affordable at $200 an hour with a recommended 20 to 40 hours per week....that would have been $4000 to $8000 per week out of pocket or $16000 to $32000 per month out of pocket...and was not a feasible solution in the past...at least not for any family I have ever known. Finally, in 2022 when I was able to receive Medicaid, and Jackie was also, ABA therapy was a covered benefit. In early 2022, I had met with the coordinator for the ABA company...and we had been on the waiting list for a long time....6 months to a year....still...even after meeting with the coordinator...it took months before we were assigned an ABA therapist.....so in 2022...Jackie was seeing an art therapist, a regular psychotherapist at 7 Counties, and an ABA Therapist....I think in the 3rd quarter of 2023 is when the ABA therapist left the company she'd been with, so we were again left adrift trying to find services.

When I spoke to the psychiatry department through Norton, they asked about medications, service providers (physicians), therapists, and stated there was no need for Jackie to have any additional psychiatric help...and they strongly complimented me on my parenting and doing everything possible to take the best care of Jackie that was possible.

In 2023....Lindsey, the Seven Counties therapist left to go elsewhere...and the art therapist had stopped seeing Jackie....we were struggling to find appropriate gender-affirming care for Jackie to get the needed letter for the PAGE clinic...we were referred to a therapy agency that operates solely via telehealth...and after being shuffled through therapists...that 'they' assigned Jackie to....they decided to not see Jackie...it was a big let down....

Darcie Taggart began seeing Jackie shortly after that. From my calendar, it looks like Jackie began seeing Darcie around August of 2023....Jackie's neuropsychiatric evaluation that I had done in 2022 in the middle of the year also came back showing Jackie as having Autism Spectrum Disorder Level 2 and ADHD. It was done by Dr. David Charles at Meridian Behavioral Health.

In late 2022....we had whole genome sequencing done with the results coming back in early 2023 showing that Jackie had one copy of a pathogenic gene, and I had 2 copies of it....the defective gene shows both of us have a primary immune deficiency disorder or inborn error of immunity. That pathogenicity can lead to some of the things Jackie was...and...is....experiencing health-wise.

I'd also applied for Jackie to receive SSI due to all of the mental and physical health issues that she was experiencing, and she was found disabled as of May 2023....now....however...she is listed through SSA as just falling under the umbrella of the disability benefit that I am receiving due to her being the child of a disabled worker...which means a small but slightly larger amount than if she were only collecting SSI. Jackie is on the waiting list, also, for the Michelle P. Waiver, but the list is several years long, so I don't know if she will even be able to access waiver services.

Jackie continues to see Darcie and Darcie has been really a good fit for Jackie.

Please let me know once you have officially closed the case, and please provide documentation to me once that has occurred. I think you said you would, but I want to make sure I ask for that for my records, please.

Subject: How we have been treated unprofessionally and unethically by Open Doors Counseling Center -- Date: 2023-07-06 -- Detailed history of experience - John R. Fouts / Jaqquelyn A. Fouts

Thursday, July 6, 2023

To Whom It May Concern:

We were referred to Open Doors Counseling Center by Akhilah Cherry, my child Jaqquelyn's former therapist (art therapist)... we were told you all would be glad to work with us in any way that you can to help Jaqquelyn be able to receive a letter from a gender affirming therapy center regarding what is required by the PAGE clinic at the Novak Center in Louisville, KY. The PAGE Clinic is a transgender focused multidisciplinary program at the Novak Center (a collaboration between Norton Healthcare and University of Louisville Physicians).

We contacted Natalia to establish an appointment. Natalia set Jaqquelyn up with Bradley Sansom...however...prior to the first meeting...Natalia contacted us and said that Bradley was new, and that Jaqquelyn needed to see someone with more experience. Natalia told us Whitney was a better fit.

We waited and waited to get a link from Whitney at our first scheduled appointment with her....but she was a no show....She did not send us a link, nor did she respond to email sent to her regarding needing the link for our appointment. I had also called and left messages at your main number regarding not having the meeting information. So that was a huge disappointment - to have a therapist not show on your first session...

We did end up getting to meet with Whitney for 2 or 3 sessions, but then Natalia called us and said Whitney decided she was not a good fit for Jaqquelyn to see...

Then Natalia told me that we needed to get Jaqquelyn set up with Stacy. She was also working on getting me scheduled, so she told me that I needed to see someone so I could get established with your case managers.

Natalia set me up with Joshua. I had one meeting with Joshua. Then we learned that Stacy could not see children under 16.

Natalia called and told me that I could see Stacy and that Joshua could see Jaqquelyn - and that was okay...but I am definitely very frustrated and feel this is very unethical treatment and bordering on discrimination....the continuous switching of therapists...

Anyway - I saw Stacy one time last week at noon on Wednesday, and was told she would be my new therapist....and that Joshua would be Jaqquelyn's new therapist...

Jaqquelyn met with Joshua one time (this Monday)....just like other therapists from your organization have said, they were informed last minute about the change of clients...

Joshua said no one talked to him about taking on Jaqquelyn's case, and that he 'normally' does not see children under 18 years old. But he talked to me and got consent to see Jaqquelyn.

This Wednesday...Stacy did not send me a link, or communicate in any way...it is not my responsibility, as a client, to continuously ask your therapists, to do their jobs - sending links... (Joshua was very good about this - sending links)...

Then today, after Stacy not sending a link and being a no-show for my appointment, you (Patricia) send me an email stating that you have an opening for me to see an even different therapist - and stated that Jaqquelyn and me could not see the same therapist because that is not an okay practice, and I understand that, but we are not seeing the same therapist!

Then you sent me an email stating that I was not even scheduled with any therapist! I have had it up to here!! You also stated you were going to have a meeting to see about the 'future of our case at your organization'....what in the world does that mean? You all keep passing us from therapist to therapist, and then act like we did something wrong... I don't get that at all - and would like a full, written, explanation please.

So you know, Marsheria (aka Marsha) contacted me about scheduling an appointment next week on Tuesday (she is a case manager that works for you).

Also, I am aware of how to file a complaint with the American Psychological Association regarding violations of ethical standards. I do not want to have to pursue this course.

https://www.apa.org/ethics/contact

I would also like to receive a written apology for the way we have been treated.

My contact information is below along with Jaqquelyn.

Hello John,

I have an available telehealth appointment for Jeremy Coleman at 3pm on Monday 7/10/2023. It is a conflict of interest for you and your daughter to see the same therapist. I would be happy to make this appointment for you if you would like.

Please let me know.

Thank you,

Thursday, July 6, 2023

To Whom It May Concern:

We were referred to Open Doors Counseling Center by Akhilah Cherry, my child Jaqquelyn's former therapist (art therapist)... we were told you all would be glad to work with us in any way that you can to help Jaqquelyn be able to receive a letter from a gender affirming therapy center regarding what is required by the PAGE clinic at the Novak Center in Louisville, KY. The PAGE Clinic is a transgender focused multidisciplinary program at the Novak Center (a collaboration between Norton Healthcare and University of Louisville Physicians).

We contacted Natalia to establish an appointment. Natalia set Jaqquelyn up with Bradley Sansom...however...prior to the first meeting...Natalia contacted us and said that Bradley was new, and that Jaqquelyn needed to see someone with more experience. Natalia told us Whitney was a better fit.

We waited and waited to get a link from Whitney at our first scheduled appointment with her....but she was a no show....She did not send us a link, nor did she respond to email sent to her regarding needing the link for our appointment. I had also called and left messages at your main number regarding not having the meeting information. So that was a huge disappointment - to have a therapist not show on your first session...

We did end up getting to meet with Whitney for 2 or 3 sessions, but then Natalia called us and said Whitney decided she was not a good fit for Jaqquelyn to see...

Then Natalia told me that we needed to get Jaqquelyn set up with Stacy. She was also working on getting me scheduled, so she told me that I needed to see someone so I could get established with your case managers.

Natalia set me up with Joshua. I had one meeting with Joshua. Then we learned that Stacy could not see children under 16.

Natalia called and told me that I could see Stacy and that Joshua could see Jaqquelyn - and that was okay...but I am definitely very frustrated and feel this is very unethical treatment and bordering on discrimination....the continuous switching of therapists...

Anyway - I saw Stacy one time last week at noon on Wednesday, and was told she would be my new therapist....and that Joshua would be Jaqquelyn's new therapist...

Jaqquelyn met with Joshua one time (this Monday)....just like other therapists from your organization have said, they were informed last minute about the change of clients...

Joshua said no one talked to him about taking on Jaqquelyn's case, and that he 'normally' does not see children under 18 years old. But he talked to me and got consent to see Jaqquelyn.

This Wednesday...Stacy did not send me a link, or communicate in any way...it is not my responsibility, as a client, to continuously ask your therapists, to do their jobs - sending links... (Joshua was very good about this - sending links)...

Then today, after Stacy not sending a link and being a no-show for my appointment, you (Patricia) send me an email stating that you have an opening for me to see an even different therapist - and stated that Jaqquelyn and me could not see the same therapist because that is not an okay practice, and I understand that, but we are not seeing the same therapist!

Then you sent me an email stating that I was not even scheduled with any therapist! I have had it up to here!! You also stated you were going to have a meeting to see about the 'future of our case at your organization'....what in the world does that mean? You all keep passing us from therapist to therapist, and then act like we did something wrong... I don't get that at all - and would like a full, written, explanation please.

So you know, Marsheria (aka Marsha) contacted me about scheduling an appointment next week on Tuesday (she is a case manager that works for you).

Also, I am aware of how to file a complaint with the American Psychological Association regarding violations of ethical standards. I do not want to have to pursue this course.

I would also like to receive a written apology for the way we have been treated.

To Whom It May Concern:

We were referred to Open Doors Counseling Center by Akhilah Cherry, my child Jaqquelyn's former therapist (art therapist)... we were told you all would be glad to work with us in any way that you can to help Jaqquelyn be able to receive a letter from a gender affirming therapy center regarding what is required by the PAGE clinic at the Novak Center in Louisville, KY. The PAGE Clinic is a transgender focused multidisciplinary program at the Novak Center (a collaboration between Norton Healthcare and University of Louisville Physicians).

We contacted Natalia to establish an appointment. Natalia set Jaqquelyn up with Bradley Sansom...however...prior to the first meeting...Natalia contacted us and said that Bradley was new, and that Jaqquelyn needed to see someone with more experience. Natalia told us Whitney was a better fit.

We waited and waited to get a link from Whitney at our first scheduled appointment with her....but she was a no show....She did not send us a link, nor did she respond to email sent to her regarding needing the link for our appointment. I had also called and left messages at your main number regarding not having the meeting information. So that was a huge disappointment - to have a therapist not show on your first session...

We did end up getting to meet with Whitney for 2 or 3 sessions, but then Natalia called us and said Whitney decided she was not a good fit for Jaqquelyn to see...

Then Natalia told me that we needed to get Jaqquelyn set up with Stacy. She was also working on getting me scheduled, so she told me that I needed to see someone so I could get established with your case managers.

Natalia set me up with Joshua. I had one meeting with Joshua. Then we learned that Stacy could not see children under 16.

Natalia called and told me that I could see Stacy and that Joshua could see Jaqquelyn - and that was okay...but I am definitely very frustrated and feel this is very unethical treatment and bordering on discrimination....the continuous switching of therapists...

Anyway - I saw Stacy one time last week at noon on Wednesday, and was told she would be my new therapist....and that Joshua would be Jaqquelyn's new therapist...

Jaqquelyn met with Joshua one time (this Monday)....just like other therapists from your organization have said, they were informed last minute about the change of clients...

Joshua said no one talked to him about taking on Jaqquelyn's case, and that he 'normally' does not see children under 18 years old. But he talked to me and got consent to see Jaqquelyn.

This Wednesday...Stacy did not send me a link, or communicate in any way...it is not my responsibility, as a client, to continuously ask your therapists, to do their jobs - sending links... (Joshua was very good about this - sending links)...

Then today, after Stacy not sending a link and being a no-show for my appointment, you (Patricia) send me an email stating that you have an opening for me to see an even different therapist - and stated that Jaqquelyn and me could not see the same therapist because that is not an okay practice, and I understand that, but we are not seeing the same therapist!

Then you sent me an email stating that I was not even scheduled with any therapist! I have had it up to here!! You also stated you were going to have a meeting to see about the 'future of our case at your organization'....what in the world does that mean? You all keep passing us from therapist to therapist, and then act like we did something wrong... I don't get that at all - and would like a full, written, explanation please.

So you know, Marsheria (aka Marsha) contacted me about scheduling an appointment next week on Tuesday (she is a case manager that works for you).

Also, I am aware of how to file a complaint with the American Psychological Association regarding violations of ethical standards. I do not want to have to pursue this course.

https://www.apa.org/ethics/contact

I would also like to receive a written apology for the way we have been treated.

My contact information is below along with Jaqquelyn.

They kept switching Jackie from therapist to therapist and then the office manager called and told me they were having a meeting to determine whether to drop Jackie or not....the reasoning initially was for 'switching therapists'....but we only did what they told us to do....they didn't help Jackie in any way aside from causing more anxiety and issues....and making Jackie feel like there is no help available - which is the exact opposite of what needed to happen.

They treated us very unethically, and very unprofessionally.... in the letter they finally sent to us...they said that the reasoning was that they don't normally work with children and it was a resource constraint issue.....so they should have never have tried to 'blame' us for 'switching therapists' when we only did exactly as they told us to do... it was a very frustrating and ridiculous experience.

Regarding inquiries to the privately-managed rent-assisted housing providers on the list I sent to you a couple of day ago, your best bet is the direct approach (I have to confess to having no great expertise here...):

- Ask if they have any units available for that might suit your needs.
- Tell them about your circumstances (family size, income, any accessibility need you may require).
- If the initial response is positive, then they will be able to tell you process is for applying and how long it should take.
- Let the apartment folks know If you have medical documentation to support your cats as support animals (emotional support animals are not considered pets, so pet restrictions should not apply). HUD's Office of Fair Housing can provide you with information on your rights and responsibilities as a tenant with a support animal. The HUD Kentucky Web Manager (KYWebmanager@hud.gov) can direct you to the Fair Housing office.

2.) Remind me to talk to you about the false memories my dad had of a speeding ticket I got....when I was in high school....my friends and I went to Kart Kountry (ironically - in Shepherdsville).....we were all honors kids....we had to rush back because we had some kind of national honors society or maybe rotary club thing going on that night.....everyone was speeding....I was the last car at the pack of cars....and I got pulled over for speeding and got a speeding ticket....and in high school....since I was not working at that time (when I got the ticket) - although I had worked before and after that at various job.... - I had no way to pay and had to ask my dad to help pay.

His memory of this event was that he said I said that I just got a speeding ticket because all of my other friends had gotten them and I wanted to be like them and said that was one of the stupidest things he had ever heard..... this came up on the trip... I said I refuse to accept your false memories of reality - and explained what happened....both of my parents did not say anything nor acknowledge that I spoke at all.....that pattern of them not acknowledging that I was even talking happened very frequently on the trip....to the point that I said 'my words matter - and I am not going to waste my breath for people that don't even care to hear the words that I speak - it is very rude and inconsiderate to actively ignore someone speaking directly to you'. That is around the time that my dad said all he hears when I talk is 'meh meh meh'. Then there was a whole lunch fiasco later....too tired to type it out now...but wanted to let you know about the ticket situation....I feel like they always expect the worst possible thing out of me...and Theresa...I was a very good kid....honor roll...top 2% of class....graduated 8/392 with a 4.220 weighted GPA ... had to take Summer School classes each year as an honors student to maintain my place in the class rank...etc...later....when I graduated from Purdue....there was a fiasco too....at my dad's retirement party...many years ago....everyone of his co workers kept telling me how proud of me they were for graduating from Purdue's engineering school...but I didn't graduate from Purdue with an engineering degree....I graduated with a degree in Organizational Leadership and Supervision (B.S. in Technology).....so either my dad was embarrassed by my major.....really that is the only explanation I can come up with....it was truthfully incredibly hurtful to me....I busted my ass to get through Purdue including taking some 21 credit hour summer sessions which was fucking difficult!

Subject: Two quick things

Hi Theresa.

I have two really super quick things...

1.) Can you please write a letter validating that my cats are support animals? I need one for Jackie and one for me. I know Akhilah saw Jackie - the other therapy place dropped us....because they kept switching Jackie from therapist to therapist (not our fault at all - we only did exactly what they said to do....)... Don't have hundreds or thousands of extra dollars out of pocket to pay for a practice that does not take our insurance. I really like Dr. Charles too....just don't have any extra money. I have a goose egg instead $0.

Right now - food is my primary focus - as I have no money - and no resources.

Well we are still on a waiting list right now. I'm having trouble, honestly, making it to the appointments that we have. As you all know, I'm the one that takes Jackie to 99% of appointments, and many times, Jackie's must be in person. With the chronic fatigue situation, it is very difficult. That being said, I think you all also know, that Jackie's care is of the utmost priority to me - my #1 priority is to get Jackie the best care that I can that Jackie needs.

I will follow-up today to see where we are on the other waitlist.

Found this too - this is interesting...

In the Holy Bible Matthews Chapter 10 Verse 8 (108) reads::: Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons; freely ye received, freely give.

Some believe this as the reason for choosing the number 108.

Stonehenges Sarsen Circle is about 108 feet in diameter.

FM Radio frequency upper limit is 108 MHz

The temple bells ring 108 times at year end in Japan

108 degrees Fahrenheit is the internal temperature at which the vital organs of human body begin to fail from overheating

108 is composed of numbers 1, 0 and 8.

1- Stands for supreme truth or god consciousness
0- Stands for nothing or emptiness.

8- Stand for eternity or infinity. Note that the symbol of infinity is obtained by rotating 8 by 90 degrees.

Thus the sacred number 108 tells us that we are at once something, nothing and everything.

Anyway - thought you might find some of those things interesting.

Talk to you soon - thanks for being a good listener and for helping as always. I wanted to also mention how great of a job I think Akhilah is doing with helping Jackie.

See you soon.

Jackie and I were talking about how it would be helpful if there were a smoother transition into sessions to avoid stress at high levels right before starting them. I'm sure you are already aware of the issues.

This week, it says there is a problem, and to call a Michigan number. The phone number goes to an individual's cell phone - she does not mention the company name (I don't think - if she did - I didn't hear it)....Jackie and I both left messages.

If she leaves at 5 p.m. then there is no way to get in touch with Tech Support for Therapy Portal until the next business day.

Please can you set up a Zoom meeting link for Jackie for 5:30 tonight?

Thank you Darcie - and thanks for remembering Jackie this week. She has not had an 'episode' for a while now thankfully. My theory is that those episodes are related to neuroinflammation, and that the neuroinflammation comes from the genetic deficiency gene TACI deficiency that Jackie has one copy of that affects B cells -- it impairs them leading to more naive than expected and fewer memory B cells than expected. So if there is any infection being fought off ever it can lead to that situation and throw off the immune system balance. It is not proven yet, but I am almost certain, from what I have read, that it lowers life expectancy considerably....of course that research needs to be done before anything can be 'proven'. And I think that mainly would occur for homozygous variations (that is what I have)....the odds are 1:500,000 to 1:1,000,000 of that gene being deficient homozygously.....I always felt special -- sarcasm...Anyway - I am trying to learn as much as I can about it so Jackie can have information if she develops other symptoms....we are of course trying to prevent any symptomology from occurring to begin with though.

She would like either slot most likely but the earlier one may work better … not so close to when mom comes home for her…you know?

I can send Jackie a msg, but can you also msg her? Let's aim for the 3:30.

You should ask Jackie about her new YouTube channel. It is performing fabulously.

Wow, I never use that adverb!

No word back on the family therapy yet. Just fyi. No word back on the eating disorder center yet either fyi.

Okay - have a good weekend. I can't think that far ahead so you are far ahead of me! I need help Darcie....with so many things....I need a good case worker for the medicaid waiver program HCBS....my case worker really doesn't do anything...I haven't been able to get any services for almost a year of having the waiver...and mco services all are disallowed when you are on a waiver....so I have way worse coverage....nobody that can help....and completely overwhelmed and am sicker....I want to be there for Jackie (stay alive)....are there case workers at Seven Counties that deal with Medicaid HCBS? Lmk whenever you can - enjoy your weekend!

Thanks for being willing to talk to her about it... She is water-averse.... and I get it ... .because I am somewhat water averse.....but I bathe at least every 2 or 3 days at a minimum unless I am in a bad CFS/ME flare....

Jackie sometimes goes 4, 5, 6 weeks.....she has a lot of dandruff in her hair.....she has a primary immune deficiency disorder and so do I (TACI Deficiency aka TNFRSF13B Deficiency)....

Please see below from the IDF (Immuno-Deficiency-Foundation)...."Proper hygiene is 'crucial' for people with PI [Primary Immunodeficiency]..."

https://primaryimmune.org/living-primary-immunodeficiency/general-care

Proper hygiene is crucial for people with PI and their families to prevent exposure to germs and infections. This involves regular bathing, and hand washing using soap and hot water for at least 20 seconds. Regular dental visits, proper brushing, and flossing are also important to prevent tooth decay and related complications.
To avoid infectious diseases, people with PI should minimize their exposure to people or places that carry a risk of infection, such as crowded indoor spaces during flu or COVID surges.

...People with common variable immunodeficiency (CVID), a condition that can cause a deficiency in TACI, are more likely to get infections due to impaired antibody development. Infections can be dangerous and lead to life-threatening complications.

Bacterial infections CVID patients are more likely to experience bacterial complications than viral, parasitic, or fungal infections. These infections can occur in the upper and lower respiratory tract, as well as the gastrointestinal tract. Common infections include: Pneumonia, Ear infections, Sinusitis, and Chronic coughing.

Long-term lung infections can lead to chronic bronchitis, also known as bronchiectasis. This condition is characterized by thickened airway walls that are colonized by bacteria.

Viral infections Recurrent shingles is the most common viral skin infection in CVID patients. Other viral infections, such as adenovirus, CMV, and EBV, can also be fatal.

Complications Infections can lead to other complications, including:

- Autoimmune problems that can cause reduced levels of blood cells or platelets
- Enlarged spleen and swollen glands or lymph nodes
- Painful swollen joints in the knee, ankle, elbow, or wrist
- Diarrhea
- Problems absorbing food nutrients
- Reduced liver function
- Impaired blood flow to the liver

It is very important Darcie -- I just cannot force Jackie to bathe but it puts our health (hers and mine as well -- at greater risk...)

Almost every kid I see has had some sort of respiratory/sinus combo since school returned to sessions. However, the hygiene thing (while super annoying) is also very much ASD for her age. Yet maybe setting a schedule or some sort of routine will help. I'll talk to her on Monday. Thanks for letting me know.

Darcie,

You are right. I could have done a better job...

Yes my tone was direct.

They hadn't communicated anything for weeks, and initiial contact was made about a month ago.

It doesn't take several weeks to check insurance.

I've dealt with hundreds of doctors in many specialties and subspecialties across many states over a 15 year period...and it just doesn't take many weeks to check insurance.

Cheryl Gilbert wrote to me and told me that they still need Lindsay to call them and provide her insurance information, and told me it was also because of therapist availability to take a new client.

I most often live by the adage 'you catch more flies with honey than with vinegar' but sometimes fail.

Update on eating disorders...I've applied for financial aid through that office.

Last I know of that is they are waiting on Lindsay to provide her financial info for that application.

Thx 4 letting me know about time change 4 next week. I've adjusted our calendar.

It sounds to me like they are waiting to find you a spot and to make sure that the insurance issues is not going to be a problem. The last thing you want is for them to start scheduling appointments and then realize the insurance will not pay and you end up with a large bill. Sometimes it takes time to check into these things and the insurance game is not fast. I know you are anxious for Jackie to start family therapy and that with that sometimes it is very frustrating to have to wait but that does not mean they do not want to help Jackie or you, it just may mean it takes longer than you would like to get started.

Also, next Monday I need to push Jackie's session to 6:30 instead of 5:30 like we usually meet. Same day just an hour later as I have a meeting conflict. I look forward to continuing to see her then and the every Monday schedule seems to be going well.

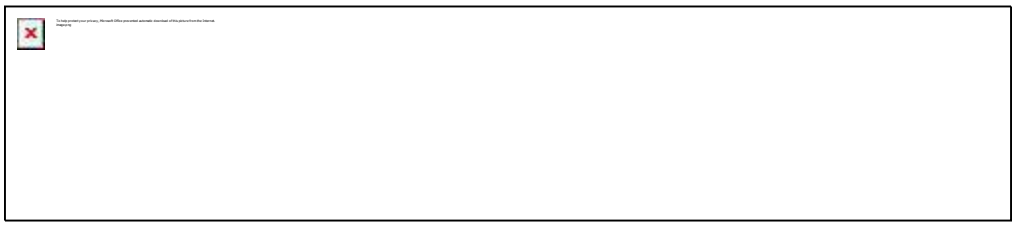
Okay no problem. Thanks for reaching out - yes I understand about the insurance and billing situation and that is yet another reason why I, too, was confused about whether service would be covered or not.

I have 'Traditional KY Medicaid' with no MCO....that is because I am on the Home and Community Based Services Medicaid Waiver program.

Here is Jackie's card (which says Jack because her legal name is not yet changed to Jaqquelyn - so on insurance documents still Jack A. Fouts....Jackie's chosen name is Jaqquelyn A. Fouts with the nickname Jackie. Jackie uses she/her pronouns).

Telehealth is what we would like to have set up - or after an initial visit or whatever your rule may be.

I, of course, do not have any knowledge of what my ex-wife's insurance is...



You can reach my ex-wife by calling her at (502) 475-6896, but she prefers email so lindsayfoutscpa@gmail.com.

Thank you Tayler.

Thanks Darcie. 2 or 3 (maybe 4 weeks ago) you had said you'd keep it in mind that Jackie wanted to meet a couple of times during a week or two. That is okay. Yes - I understand it is definitely always busy as mental health needs have grown exponentially especially in recent years. Have a good night.

Darcie,

I think 5:30 on all weeks is a great idea. School gets out at 2:10 this year so much earlier also...also...I am presently on a break from infusions but will be starting them up again soon...and now have a need to have Myers Cocktail type infusions along with high dose vitamin C and NAD due to microclots in my circulation (Grade 3 out of 4)....I am going to soon be on triple anticoagulant therapy too which is a bit intimidating to me...but it gives my body the best chance to be able to dissolve the microclots....

Jackie had mentioned that she wanted to possibly meet with you a 2nd time this week and maybe next week too....before school starts basically....would you have any availability on Thursday or Friday of this week? She forgot to ask you in session yesterday.

Also - I haven't yet had time to follow up with the family therapy organization but it is on my list for today. I have had some setbacks here lately.

I'm actually wondering if it would be possible to just do every Monday at 5:30pm instead of switching back and forth between Mondays and Wednesdays to provide consistency for Jackie. I am hoping since your new place is so much closer to her school that this year it will cut down on the travel time Monday evening AND maybe give you a break that night since I know Monday is your infusion day. I have that 5:30pm time open weekly so we could just keep it that way if it works for you.

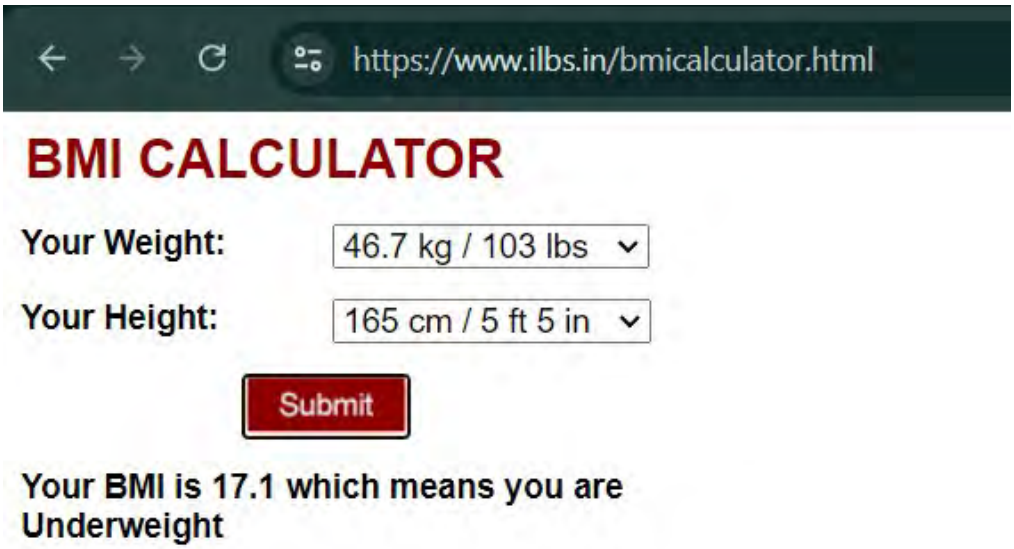
Thank you for the information Darcie. Since she is skipping many meals, and continuing to state she is 'fat' or eating '18 bites' but having you know 95% of a can of Spaghettios left after eating said 18 bites...and being underweight...her mother and I both feel it is a problem - and we agree on very little. I appreciate the information.

Her PCP is who suggested that I contact you about the family therapy - it has been a while so you had probably forgotten. I went to her PCP first.

Jackie is underweight.



I appreciate you sending this information. Thanks again.

Regarding Eating related issues while I definitely address this it's not something that Jackie identifies to me as a major issue for her, that does NOT mean it's not something to focus on and definitely I would want to include a medical professional. My first recommendation is always talking to her primary care or pediatrician so they can monitor it and look at weight and age appropriate norms. They will note if anything is majorly out of the ordinary regarding weight loss or loss of growth patterns. I think in regards to thinking she is fat sadly she is in really good company with other girls her age, it's something I hear from girls all the time. BUT because it truly can be an issue that's why I say it's good to get a medical professional onboard to truly monitor weight and growth.

IF the pediatrician feels that she is losing weight/growth I think that this place is usually the first place i recommend folks call: https://www.louisvillecenterforeatingdisorders.com/

I do not know if the Louisville Center for Eating Disorders accepts insurance but it would be good to check!

Jackie continues to eat less and less. I am concerned about her getting skinnier and skinnier and no matter what, she thinks she is fat.

Have you had any luck with finding anyone regarding this? I have not been able to find specific groups that deal with this.

The social worker, and the cps worker, both asked me what your plan is for Jackie's care. Is it possible for me to get a copy or roadmap for what your ongoing plan is for Jackie?

She does not have all of the help that she needs. I know she enjoys talking with you a great deal, and I am thankful and grateful that you have established such a good rapport with her, and continue working with her. I know that she nearly always looks forward to meeting with you each week.

Is it appropriate to request another parent session to go over these things? I think we would only need 20 or 30 min.

Jackie blew up at me because I told her it was lunch time and asked her if she could put on a tv show and get us plates and drinks. She is accustomed to not doing anything to help most of the time. I am in need of her to help do some basic things. If I ask though, it usually results in her shouting at my face and screaming she hates me, and her slamming the door in my face, or similar things -- part of it is normal teenage behavior - and part of it seems to be extreme way above and beyond that. I have been stuck at this point with her for maybe 2 years or something - possibly 3. It makes me very sad because Jackie used to not treat me in those ways -- used to act much more appropriately -- and I don't know what caused the change. I think the mental status change may be COVID related.

If you are able to meet somewhat soon for 20 or 30 minutes, it would be appreciated - to discuss Jackie's path forward, her therapy goals that you and she have, and how progress is being measured please.

Some homeschooling -- Jackie was not generally vested in me doing homeschooling with her -- in fact -- she went out of her way to be obstinate a vast majority of the time, which made me feel like I was in an impossible position of her being bullied if she were at school, her mother doing nothing per the norm, and me being forced, as a responsible person and parent, to try to pick up all the slack everywhere despite being so very ill....Darcie...you have to understand....at a minimum...I feel like I have a very bad flu....ALL THE TIME...it is relentless....it is so very hard to deal with in life (chronic illness)...

https://photos.app.goo.gl/VmdjmYDHpsn7rFvx8

At UK, Dr. Deniskin (immunology) referred Jackie for neuropsychiatric follow up testing but with a focus on hallucinations and paranoia and basically schizophrenia evaluation I think. I think/hope we will be able to get in there quickly.

Here is some information about Post-Covid-19 Mental Health Issues....e.g. within 90 days of acute infection many patients developed a new mental health disorder....

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Rn306wjvl3g

Jackie had long covid after covid and still deals with many of those issues that are not yet resolved (e.g. fatigue....headache....mental status changes...etc..short term memory issues...)

Let me know about when a parent session can take place please. Thank you.

Subject: It has been a long day but need to fill you in on some things -- had appt with Jackie / for Jackie ... and for me together ... with immunologist at UK Clinic today

Darcie,

Jackie did okay at the appt but was as always lately, continuing to express more and more and more autistic traits. It is harder and harder to be able to communicate effectively -- I am sure part of it is my own lack of health that is making things harder, but also there has been an uptick in autism type behaviors.

Anyway, the immunologist advised that we might talk to the social worker because she might be able to help with some resources...so we met her. Her name is Karen. She was very nice, and Jackie did talk quite a bit to her mentioning thoughts and plans of suicide many times. She almost was forced to have us go to the ER at UK. Thankfully though, our hands were not forced in that direction. She did express how urgently it seemed that Jackie needed help, and sometimes I am in agreement with that but as Jackie's behavior totally flips on a dime one way or the other, it is unpredictable....plus if Jackie said she was in need of going to the crisis center, or something, and I take her there, then she tells them that she never said that, and that I am lying....so then, of course, the therapists don't know what to believe or who to believe, and I get that...part of the problem with constantly seeking out more resources, Darcie, is that I am very ill. I know I do not look like it, but I am... I found out yesterday, also, that I have microclots (got results back after blood shipped weeks ago)...they are caused by the COVID virus, and lead to a much greater chance of stroke and/or heart attack, and my risks for both of those are already very high.

Anyway - I told Karen that it was a matter, literally of me having the energy to get me and Jackie back home...I truly didn't have enough ability physically to go to an ER for several additional hours, and I told her that I felt Jackie was safe, but just emphasizing basically in an autistic way her feelings. I told her that you and I had discussed suicidality and when to take action in the past, and she told me I needed to reach out to you tonight to fill you in. I do not disagree...Jackie has been acting very differently (not necessarily in a suicidal way...)...just differently like not hearing things...totally disregarding all manners....not listening whatsoever....blurting out conversation in front of adults talking about serious matters etc....it seems like she is regressing.

Karen gave me the name of the Outpatient therapy mental health person for UK, and I think Jackie could benefit from that, but I'd like to get your thoughts, so you could weigh in. We would have to go there for the first visit but then it could be telehealth. Jackie agreed she'd like to have more help too. She may deny agreeing, but she did....Jackie also discussed with the doctor (immunologist) hearing voices and hallucinating and paranoia....and I could tell the doctor was thinking it might be a schizophrenic type of thing going on. He said he could refer Jackie to get neuropsychiatric testing and to psychiatry at UK....so I told him that sounds like a plan - maybe we will be able to get more testing done more quickly in terms of mental health. I have always also had good experiences at UK and think it is a sound decision.

In the good news category....Jackie was very against having her labs drawn at first, but the Child Life Team at UK is wonderful and helped her through it and she didn't hardly even notice that her bloodwork was being done. Jackie did a great job with that! Jackie has been enjoying watching some Joe Biden fumbles on YouTube. I keep telling Jackie that yes they are funny, but I feel very sorry that Joe is in that position and doesn't really seem to understand the issues with his own health. Karen asked me why you and Jackie don't discuss suicidality. I said that you advised that Jackie would need to bring it up, and Jackie said that she would only talk about it if you brought it up, and that I am not involved in your sessions, but we have had some sessions surrounding that topic and more (parent sessions).

If it is possible to talk to Jackie some, without Jackie bringing it up, tomorrow, please try to get her to open up in that way a little. I also think Jackie is having a tremendous amount of trouble hearing -- and I don't know why...no infections....the auditory processing is addressed with the hearing aids....I think trouble hearing is making Jackie seem disconnected from the world. She also is awaiting her new glasses arriving with a different prescription - so once those arrive I think that will help some too.

I do not feel like Jackie is a danger to herself - especially now -- when she was talking to them earlier at UK, she was very hungry, very tired, and seemingly extraordinarily bored with the people in the room. After she ate, and took a little nap in the car, she seemed a lot better off mentally.

Other good news -- the 2 year investigation into me by CPS that I had no knowledge of until the last 2 weeks has been closed with no findings to support the claims that were made. I am still upset by that whole situation (not mad - just it is upsetting...). I have always tried to take care of Jackie in the very best ways that I can - you know?

Hope you have a great night. I know Jackie is looking forward to meeting with you tomorrow. I signed the release for Karen to talk to you. I realize I may need to sign one for you to talk to her. Please send me any necessary forms and I will take care of them. Thank you Darcie.

Telehealth is easier due to fatigue issues...but either way is OK. Tomorrow at 2:30 is great ... thank you.

Subject: Schedule - CPS - Other -- 2024-06-05 -- Art Therapy

Hi Darcie,

Glad you and Jackie got to meet tonight. With how busy your schedule always is, I am just so glad that Jackie is able to see you! You are always on the go! Seriously -- be good to yourself -- and don't overdo it -- that is part of what got me sick I think....chronically ill -- etc...

I have notated my calendar accordingly for the dates you mentioned.

In addition to seeing you for therapy, Jackie wants to do more art therapy...but Jackie did not like how she got started with Theresa....then got transitioned and had to start with Dani....then transitioned to Akilah at L.E.T. -- so I am looking for additional therapy (in addition to seeing you) that is art therapy -- in the city -- somewhere that has experience in dealing with therapy for transgendered children/adolescents. I really want to try to get this set up asap. Jackie needs to see a regular ongoing art therapist in addition to you -- and I know that I can go to Psychology today and look up names....but you are plugged into the network...and I thought you might know of a good fit....if you do - please let me know....

Re: CPS -- this week I got a call about a case that was 'still open' that needed to be closed....and I had absolutely no idea what they were talking about...I thought it was about the case of child abuse that Lindsay had against her from Colorado from 2017...but it wasn't....apparently, in 2022, some social worker, teacher, or other, made a claim that I was not making sure that Jackie got appropriate medical treatment -- apparently they thought that Jackie was not really sick (despite having doctors notes for ALL excuses)...and they tried to say that I had taken Jackie to the doctor too much or that Jackie's health issues weren't real...or that Jackie didn't have Autism or ADHD or Auditory Processing or Anxiety or Depression...or migraines....or I don't even know what...I was taken off guard...it was very strange....especially because I had heard nothing about the case at all....and it supposedly involved me.....I asked if I had a legal right to know who made the allegation - and they said there is no legal right that allows that....it is fine....

I talked to the CPS worker today....she said she had to have a home visit...I asked her if she could come today because we were stuck anyway waiting for a HUD inspector to do a Section 8 inspection....thankfully...she said she could...Darcie - I know you haven't known me for that long -- but I think you know that I take the best care of Jackie that I can and am always trying to do the best thing for Jackie....what I don't get even more...is that there was documentation for all of this in Jackie's 504 plan -- which PROTECTS students from situations such as was alleged....doctors have to submit documentation for the 504 plan....anyway - the woman's name that came out was Megan Clark. Oh yeah -- apparently a part of the complaint stated that I would not get Jackie therapy...but Jackie has been in therapy regularly for years - so that was also a false allegation... I don't really have all the details -- but I don't think I need them -- it seems like she could tell that there was no evidence of me doing anything wrong.

She said before she closes the case, she will need to talk to you to verify that you have been seeing Jackie and ask any relevant questions. I mainly just wanted you to know that she would be contacting you.

I pasted her information below so you would know to expect communication from her. This apparently stemmed from sometime in 2022.

MEGAN CLARK
Assessment Support Specialist
KVC KENTUCKY

Have a good week Darcie. If you know of anyone for Art Therapy please let me know so I can try to get Jackie scheduled. No luck on the other re:another eval for neuropsychiatric/neuropsychological...so it looks like waiting on the list for 7 Counties may be the best thing for now.

Subject: I don't know what to do...maybe you can talk to Jackie about this?

Darcie,

It is Lindsay's week...Jackie is here....she has no one else to watch Jackie, and it is totally fine that Jackie is here and I love seeing her...she refuses to let me participate with anything she is doing though, and today, I, myself, have been having a really rough day, and I told Jackie that I am just trying to find a way to spend time with her.

She responded by saying she doesn't want to see me....at all.....because it is mommy's week....so already kind of has some resentment and this is the first week of Summer....it makes me really sad and hurt that she feels that way, and I told her that that is hurtful to me. She said it is mommy's week and she doesn't want anything to do with me....so....since mommy doesn't have any other options...I don't want Jackie to harbor further resentment toward me...this is what happened during past years too....and there needs to be a different solution....I want Jackie to 'like' to see me at least sometimes....I get that she is a teeenager and won't always like to...but I feel like I might as well not even exist and it would be perfectly okay in Jackie's mind....and that is hard...

Jackie does not want to go to any kind of camp, and those camps are ridiculously expensive anyway.... And I don't really feel like it is safe for Jackie to be home alone all the time at mommy's house. She is old enough, but I don't know that she is mature enough...and her episodic especially suicidal behavior at times scares me to death with regard to the thought of her being alone all that time. Plus, if she were....she would be on nonstop media, and I have DEFINITELY noticed that the more media she does, the more dysregulated she becomes - especially if she is tired...

She has also continued this pattern of not wanting to eat breakfast, or lunch, and not having enough for dinner....yes - I am somewhat of a worrier...but I have nearly always been right when it comes to medical issues....I have a solid batting record there...so to speak...I am worried she is developing an eating disorder potentially.

Can you talk to her about these things? My parents both are working. Lindsay's parents are both anti-trans. (My dad is anti-trans...my mom claims to be 'ok' with it, but still has issues...)....it isn't a great set of options in terms of Jackie's care for Summer on mommy's weeks while mommy is at work.

Jackie also claims to have almost zero memory of any time spent with me at our old apartment -- we lived there for 5 years Darcie...Jackie remembers a lot about mommy's apartments...I don't get it whatsoever...

It's still a few months wait but that way you can give them all the info and get the insurance in the system. They will do the pre-authorization and put her on the list and then the testing team liaison will reach out when they have an open spot. I did tell them Jackie's name an info so they are expecting your call!

Subject: Jackie said something to me that I think may be important for you to talk about with her in therapy --

Darcie,

Jackie, this week, told me that she gets really upset with me sometimes because she views me as Mr. Kempf (her only male teacher in elementary school -- the teacher who told her she did not do work [that I watched her do - and submit - personally] etc...), things like that...Mr. Kempf was the whole reason I took Jackie out of Bloom Elementary to be homeschooled. I went to pick Jackie up one day for a doctor appointment and she came out of the school crying, hiding behind my leg, and telling me that day later on that Mr. Kempf wanted her to come down and tell me she lied about turning something in (that I watched her turn in). Jackie was also bullied extensively in school, despite, me alerting the Principal, all relevant staff, and even the Superintendent's Office...twice! Nothing changed....I knew on that day when I saw her, that she needed to not go back. She started homeschool on 2022-02-22.

It bothers me that she views me as Mr. Kempf, when I am the one that removed her from the situation she was in involving Mr. Kempf. You may have a perspective on this that is relevant to Jackie and therapy so I wanted to mention it to you.

Have a good weekend.

If you want or need more details I am sure I have the letter I wrote to the superintendent's office both times available somewhere on my hard drive or in the cloud.

Thanks Darcie.

I am very worried about Jackie.....she often loses several days in a row ... or even several weeks in a row...as an example....my mom paid for my whole family...my sister, my dad, 5 cousins, me, and Jackie, to go on the Polar Express train ride...Jackie had a really good time on it...but swears up and down she has no memory of ever going...if I show her things from the trip or pictures she says she doesn't remember anything about it and tries to tell me I am lying that she went there...

I grew up around a mother with 54 distinct personalities....I used to not think that is what this was....I still do not think that really...I am leaning more along the lines of schizophrenia and/or schizoaffective disorder spectrum. I could be totally wrong about things, but I can tell you I have a pretty good (nearly perfect) track record for everything else going on...

Jackie hears voices that aren't there....sees hallucinations that aren't there...has tactile hallucinations....and is very paranoid too about someone stabbing her in the back....she also has all these OCD type symptoms....and psychotic episodes...so I don't know what it is...but it is very concerning...it worries me for her...or that she may end up doing something she regrets but not being in her own mind at the time -- and I don't want anything like that to happen. I want to protect her from harm or danger, and also, make sure she gets all of the appropriate care she needs.

I am in complete agreement with everything you said. If you can put in the referral, that would be great. I also am going to try to get her in to see Healing Neurons. Would you be open to also putting in a referral there? .... If I find out that she is able to go back to Meridian Health and see Dr. David Charles again, that would be good too I think because it would be the same person evaluating the same patient and a different tangential point in time...

I see a lot of the Depersonalization/Derealization things also in Jackie...

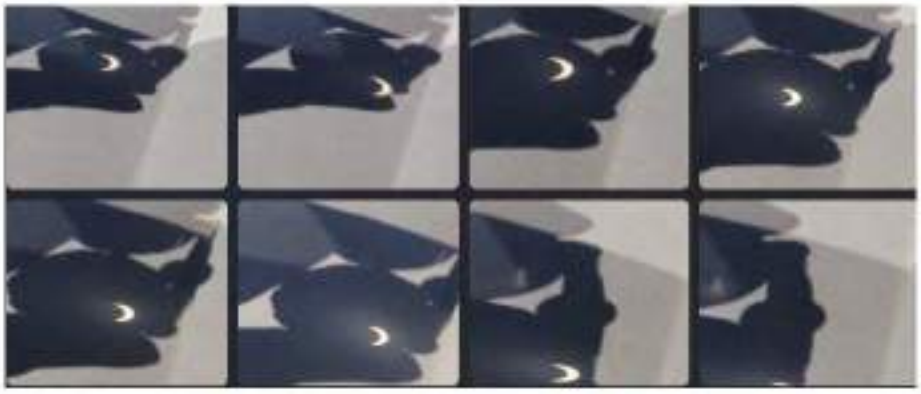
She has also gotten quite rude at times...like I will make dinner that takes 45 minutes to an hour...I ask her to do literally anything, and she outright refuses, and then when dinner is served, she eats before I even sit down, then gets up several times 6+ in the 5 minutes it takes me to eat, and then screams and rages at me in such a way it scares me...and literally makes me feel not safe...so it is a delicate situation that I am needing help with, with her and for her.

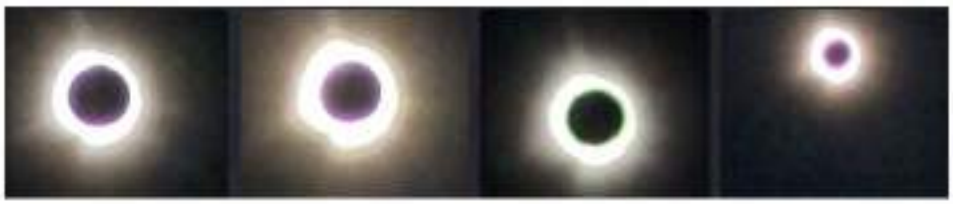
For the record, I am also trying to get myself evaluated with a full neuropsychiatric evaluation, but it is hard to find someone that does that kind of testing for adults that accepts Medicaid. I will have Medicare in December 2024. I may be dual eligible but I am not certain.

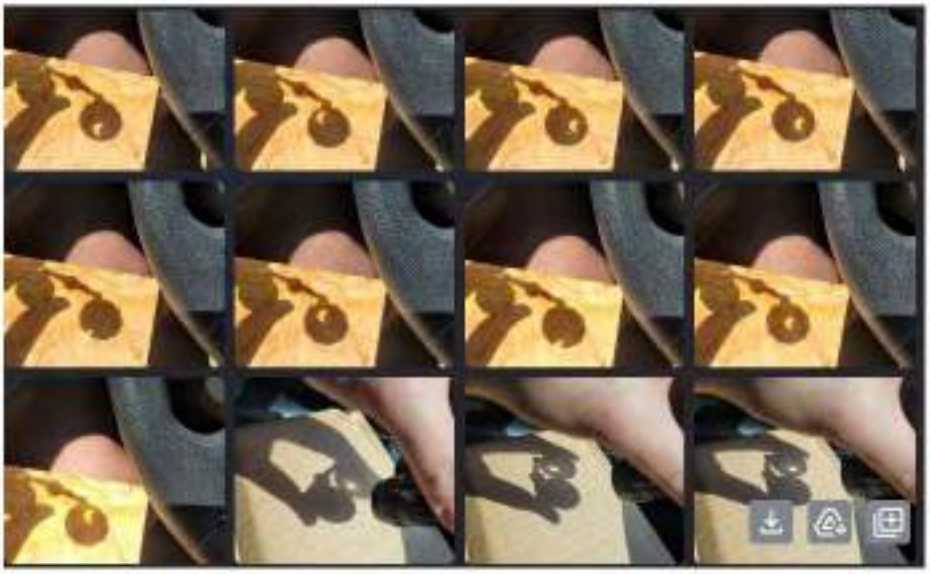
Anyway - thank you for agreeing to write a referral. I think the meds need to be reviewed also...and have wondered about the ADHD medication, however, I cannot tell if it should be increased or removed (it is very hard to know what to do sometimes). The last time we tried to increase it, she went into extreme crisis mode, and the last time we tried to have her not take it, she went into extremely active suicide mode.

I forgot to mention that she wrote down active suicidal plans in her diary....last Friday...is it okay if I send you pictures of her diary pages only pertaining to that (those are the only ones she showed me so the only ones I feel comfortable looking at and/or talking to you about)...I just feel that something's gotta change. Jackie's mom came over on Saturday and helped me out because Jackie was in such a crisis and so angry toward me for unknown reasons. Jackie kept saying I was glaring at her and having bad mean looks, and Jackie's mom kept trying to talk her down and saying I just looked like my normal self. We survived the weekend, and the solar eclipse.....

Here are some pictures we got:







Oh yes - and I understand you do not observe the behaviors with Jackie very often. I understand that. Thank you for recognizing that the amount of time spent with Jackie may play a role in exhibiting or triggering such dramatic changes in mood so rapidly and frequently.

Jackie didn't want to go see the eclipse at first, but I am thankful and grateful that she ended up enjoying the trip after all after she gave it a chance.

She enjoyed seeing the sun through the solar eclipse sunglasses I had gotten, and she thought totality was really cool . It was kind of funny though. We were near Seymour Indiana so totality was a little less than 2 minutes...she was like...how long is this gonna last...I just want to go home! I thought that was very typical teenagery!

Hope you got to see it too.

> My recommendation for testing or a full psych assessment would be Seven Counties. There will probably be a 6-8 month wait for testing but they accept Medicaid so there shouldn't be a fee which I think is good and I know their whole team and think they do a good job. I can help make that referral as long as you are OK with that, they will need to do at least SOME in person appts to do the assessment but we can cross that bridge when we come to it. I will send a release in the portal if that's acceptable and can refer. Psych testing can look at depersonalization and derealization as well as dissociation that might be occurring. Without additional assessment it's hard to completely diagnose those things. I think a lot of kids experience those things even without it being a full DID type of diagnosis. I will also say that I don't feel like I see those things as much as you do but I'm not with her as much as you are. I also think sometimes kids don't want to or block out things they feel disconnected from or embarrassed about and when asked directly they will say "nope, didn't happen" because their perception of what happened is different.
> I would also recommend we attempt to find a Psychiatrist that will take a look at all of the meds Jackie takes unless the new PCP is comfortable. There are LOTS of meds that can cause both rage and agitation and as you move towards adding puberty blockers it's important to look at the whole med cocktail. In fact sometimes our ADHD meds can start to cause agitation if what's really going on is mood disorder related and typically if that's going to happen it will start when a kid begins to move towards puberty so that's a good thing to explore. Can't hurt to explore alternatives or other options but as I am not an MD I don't know exactly what that should be.

Hi Darcie.

I signed the documents you posted for Jackie and for the information sharing with the 2 new doctors.

I didn't see a place where I could update our address, so I am providing it here...

John and Jaqquelyn (still Jack legally rn) Fouts 2904 Sitka Dr.
Apt. L29
Jeffersontown, KY 40299

I am still in process of getting the address changed everywhere - it takes forever...so many places has to be changed...

All I have ever wanted is to provide a stable environment for Jackie and living with chronic illness has made this harder than hell.

I got the formal approval letter of disability fully favorable decision yesterday...unfortunately the judge wrote in it that medical situations are expected to improve and stated a 24 month cdr continuous disability review should be done....Sjogren's is a Systemic PROGRESSIVE disease...that means it isn't going to get better....it is like it is now...or worse.....unfortunately...so that is frustrating...but after initially applying over 10 YEARS ago....literally...I am trying to celebrate the victory anyway.

That may also serve the dual purpose of feeling like having the 2 sessions of therapy in one week that she had asked about before since the sessions are close together.

She told me that she did remember today that you had told her about tonight....she had forgotten.

I have attached some information from QMed about puberty blockers and therapy in general in case you need it. It will probably be helpful for other patients/clients as well.

The new doctor was amazing today -- very kind -- very gender affirming -- very comfortable to be around -- and very engaging toward Jackie (probably the most important thing).

Thanks for being flexible to be able to see her this week. I don't know if you see this with other autistic children. Jackie is my only 'chillin' so I don't have other experience....but Jackie seems to be getting more distant/dissociative a lot of the time....the concerning part to me is the missing time that she experiences. My mother had D.I.D. but was re-integrated successfully (although I suspect a few parts are there again now for her)...but I have been around it...I know what it looks like...and the things that Jackie says she experiences are very close...but not the same...like I asked her if she could hear any voices of other people in her head....or if she could see any other people in her head....and she said no.....very directly....and I believe her...so it seems like D.I.D. doesn't fit at least not all the way...and if it did I would wonder how and why... it is hard for me to tell - and I am not a qualified expert.

I am pretty sure Jackie experiences both of the below...hell...even I have experienced both of these below....the thing is....for Jackie...it seems to happen when she is enraged and ultra-angry - and that level of rage and forgetfulness scares me....

Depersonalization/derealization disorder

Depersonalization involves a sense of separation from yourself or feeling like you're outside of yourself. You may feel as if you're seeing your actions, feelings, thoughts and self from a distance, like you're watching a movie.

Derealization involves feeling that other people and things are separate from you and seem foggy or dreamlike. Time may seem to slow down or speed up. The world may seem unreal.

You may go through depersonalization, derealization or both. Symptoms, which can be very distressing, may last hours, days, weeks or months. They may come and go over many years. Or they may become ongoing.

Dissociative amnesia

The main symptom of dissociative amnesia is memory loss that's more severe than usual forgetfulness. The memory loss can't be explained by a medical condition. You can't recall information about yourself or events and people in your life, especially from a time when you felt shock, distress or pain. A bout of dissociative amnesia usually occurs suddenly. It may last minutes, hours, or rarely, months or years.

Dissociative amnesia can be specific to events in a certain time, such as intense combat. More rarely, it can involve complete loss of memory about yourself. It sometimes may involve travel or confused wandering away from your life. This confused wandering is called dissociative fugue.

See attached for the gender documents and info.

Thanks again. John

Subject: Re:

Thank you for the guidance. Also, thank you for the guidance... The crisis line has been mostly unhelpful to us in the past with multiple people both in person, and at the crisis center itself. The last time we called the crisis line they told us they couldn't help and to take Jackie to the crisis center. When we got to the crisis center, they told us they don't deal with acute crises, and we had to leave....that wasn't helpful...that was the time we went to the Norton Children's Psychiatric Hospital....for active suicidal threat, and a doctor we never saw wrote a false report, and stated Jackie had no mention of suicidal thoughts -- which was utterly ridiculous...there are some 70 pages of documentation of me trying to get them to correct the medical record, yet they still refused...so all I have is the written documentation of my efforts to get them to be honest and truthful instead of falsifying the medical record....it is really ridiculous....

Anyway - I realize it may depend on who we talk to at any given time, but if we call, and it is 'my' suggestion, and Jackie doesn't get help, then Jackie will direct even more anger toward me....

She bangs her head down hard on things or slams it against a wall, or hits herself really hard...and she hasn't done this yet...but I can see how that could escalate to 'cutting' behaviors, and that scares me....it is very BPD-like.... I think that additional DBT therapy would be helpful for her, but last time I had known...there was only 1 therapist in the area that handled DBT therapy...Dr. Allison Bradow....and she didn't follow the DBT protocols...so it wasn't really DBT therapy as Marsha Linehan describes it, and as it has been widely accepted.

I don't think she would actively do anything either but I don't want to take any chances.... it is really weird Darcie....because she seems to have a higher level of passive suicidal ideation when she is getting care for transgender things....when she is getting the help that she needs to have....it makes me want to take her to those appointments less as she views them, and me, negatively for helping her get the care that she needs....I am truly at a loss there...it doesn't make any sense to me.

Also - I want to re-mention that sometimes Jackie says she sees or hears things that aren't there....and that is a worry too.....from my observation...this mainly happens from a sleep deprivation standpoint...and I think she may have those sleep issues where there is a dissonance between sleep state and wakefulness....like hypnagogic sleep hallucinations or narcolepsy-like behaviors while awake...there is a name for what I am trying to think of -- but it escapes me....I can tell you if I am extremely sleep deprived I start to see things sometimes...but I have to be extremely sleep deprived...and I know 100% for me that it is related to sleep issues...

I love Jackie SOOO much...and she can't even see any of that love...I just don't know how to help her see how much I love her, want to support her and be there for her, and how much I am proud of her for trying so hard at school, and for making straight As, and for so much more!

She has been saying all week how much she needs to talk to you and has been looking forward to tonight so if you told her…she forgot about the change of schedule.

I will ask her about Friday when I pick her up from school for her new PCP appointment today (hopefully one that will respectfully use her pronouns and more -- have heard good things about this one -- Dr. Eli Pendleton)….

The appointment yesterday with Dr. Leo P from QMed went well.

Hey John,

I will happily talk with Jackie but I am not around tonight. I am out of town and I think I told Jackie but I may have forgotten. I could see Jackie later on this week like Friday is she likes.

My recommendation when Jackie makes suicidal statements would be to call the crisis line at 589-8070 and ask about assessment or discuss the difficulties in the moment. You can honestly call them just when you are struggling in a parenting moment as I am not necessarily on call for crisis management usually outside of my regular hours. However the crisis line is always available 24/7 to use by parents when they can't reach me - or really outside of regular appts.

I will say I have not seen anything from Jackie that leads me to believe she is truly going to hurt herself - I think she says it in the moment to try to get a rise BUT I still think it's worth assessing.

If she would like to meet Friday after school I can do so then as I'll be back to work tomorrow.

Hey all,

You're receiving this email because we've done patient navigation with you at some point in the last year. In a shocking decision today, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals issued a stay that will lift a lower court's injunction blocking Indiana's gender-affirming care ban. Indiana's ban on gender-affirming care for minors, will now take effect immediately. Here is a press release from the ACLU about the decision.

If a child you care for has been accessing care in Indiana, please reach out as soon as possible and we will give you some alternative options for care, and general guidelines for transferring care. As a reminder, we also have funds to help with travel and copay costs, just reach out if you need assistance.

I'm sorry to deliver news about more barriers to care, I'm sending good energy to you and your families,

Subject: Re: When can I schedule a call with you?

Darcie,

That makes sense to me, and thank you for your understanding in that I am a single parent with severe chronic illness trying to do the best that I can with a child that has complex needs herself. Part of the issue is that mommy doesn't do what, in my opinion, a parent should to support his or her child...but we all have different perceptions of what those things should be....I do what I can to try to get excused doctor absence notes on mommy weeks when she won't do that for Jackie as an example....

Jackie is missing school again today, on mommy's week, again....due to vomiting....it is strange it doesn't happen on the weeks Jackie is with me...but I digress...if we could do like a 15 or 20 minute collateral parental call that would be great just to touch base. I would like to know how Jackie is doing in therapy in general - as it is my responsibility to do that as well - that being said - I don't want to encroach on Jackie's safe space in therapy in any way, so the different therapist makes sense. You have to realize I am already having to see 22 specialists though so it may be challenging to find a time that works - and it will need to be on my weeks, and not during school time, and if possible not on Mondays due to IVIG, and not on Fridays because those are transition days and it would be too difficult, and not on weekends....so at least I can see the irony in how challenging it is going to be to find someone but it is a piece that is needed I think.

Back to the mommy thing, the whole thing that keeps me from contacting CPS, is that I don't want to disrupt Jackie's routine, and don't want her to have the idea in any way that I am keeping her from her mother - and - at the same time - it concerns me - especially since mommy had a count of child abuse on her record from CPS in Colorado when we lived there. That still upsets me greatly when I think of it. I just want Jackie to have a life that is not filled with depression. I have walked that road and it is a cold and lonely place. My parents did the best they could, but with my mom's mental health challenges, and my dad working to try to hold the family together, and needing his own time to decompress from the situations, there was no one there to be supportive of me and my needs as a child...instead....I had to help take care of them and of my sister (younger)....I just don't understand how things went from one day being totally fine to one day Jackie totally flipping upside down basically...but I suppose that doesn't matter - we only have the present as a known, and can only strive for a better, positive future.

> Ok rounding back on email today. I actually think it might be a good idea for you and Jackie to see a family therapist that is JUST working on the family piece different that me working with Jackie on the peer/anxiety/gender/school related piece. I often find that having one person working on family and one person working on individual is more successful because your kid gets to keep someone that's "their person" to talk about all sorts of things and then you have a separate person who is helping with the family interaction and dynamics.

I have put out a call today looking for someone who specializes in that family work piece and will hopefully get you some referrals. I am more than happy to meet with you on the parenting piece for collateral supports but at this point it seems like it might be helpful to do some of that work together - hence my attempt to find you someone.

I also absolutely always encourage people to actively use the crisis line. That's what it's there for, especially if a kid is feeling suicidal or making suicidal statements in the moment. I can address that with Jackie next week for sure about the reasons we don't make those statements to just get out of an argument or to derail conversations but if you feel she's unsafe in the moment I would call crisis.

What I do notice is a pattern that when the routine is off it escalates Jackie for sure. This makes sense given the ASD diagnosis as often kids with ASD are very attached to routines and get dysregulated when it switches. I realize this week with the school days off there wasn't a choice but I do suspect that was a little of the escalation you noticed this week.

I will get you a list of folks that do family work ASAP and that take your insurance. If you still want to schedule a parent collateral session please let me know.

Subject: When can I schedule a call with you?

Darcie,

I need to touch base with Jackie and therapy. When can I discuss with you?

Jackie's mom is working today and Tuesday, so Jackie is with me during part of her week.

My nurses (plural), and others, have observed Jackie's treatment of me, and it often is not ok.

Today was a little above average in terms of behavior…but last week, as an example, I definitely did not feel safe driving with Jackie in the car, acting as she was.

I need to have a plan of how to handle things like that in place, so need to discuss with you, please asap.

Jackie will be with me tomorrow until 5:30…so 6pm or after I could discuss…Wednesday after 3pm I could discuss…or if those time frames won't work, please let me know and we will figure out another time.

Thank you for your guidance Darcie....can you please write an anxiety letter for Jackie also? A general one?

And just a quick other note....tomorrow....Jackie is going to have her fitting for her hearing aids for Auditory Processing Disorder (low gain hearing aids). Dr. Julie Manche is her doctor....she is an expert audiologist.....Jackie had lost a lot in one ear....

As far as Jackie not knowing her tone...I don't understand how she would know it basically from 4 years old until 10 years old roughly and then suddenly not know it....COVID?

The damage that I know COVID does is concerning to me for all humans and really all life on Earth....and it is sad that it was most likely made in a lab....and I have no idea why we are so crazy as a people as to manufacture a similar virus with a 100% kill rate.....I mean....c'mon....I think there are evil intentions amuck...but that is my opinion only....

Thanks again for everything.

Subject: I need to get the school the letter for the 5th of February from last week (please)

Darcie,

I need to have the written excuse note for the 5th when you saw Jackie when she was at her mom's please.

Also I told the school you could probably write a blanket letter for anxiety/depression, but I am not sure what you can or cannot say.

Also -- I talked to Jackie about how mommy won't take her to the doctor....her mom does not tell her very important messages and I cannot trust that Jackie will get them if I only send to Jackie's phone because Jackie is a child....an example would be last time Jackie was with mommy, I said I needed to know measurements for tucking underwear so I could get it ordered asap but no response from mommy....Jackie said mommy never even said anything at all to her about the message. Another example would be when it took mommy more than 5 months and 40 messages to sign a passport form required for Jackie to be able to get a passport.....it was getting utterly ridiculous...and frankly....many of these issues are.....

Mommy won't get healthier foods for Jackie either....per Jackie.....and Jackie said that might be what is making her feel sick....she also told the doctor at urgent care that...

Jackie said mommy usually gets fast food and won't get things from the grocery store that are healthier alternatives for her. Darcie - 4 doctors have stated very strongly that it is critically important for someone with Gastroparesis to not eat much processed food as it is very damaging to health....Jackie also has a gene mutation that affects the TACI protein (like me) but at least Jackie only has 1 bad copy.....still 1 copy has been shown to be a pathogenic variant...mommy is also aware of this but won't do the things to help Jackie have the best health....some of the things are FREE ... like daily exercise or going outside daily....

The teachers at school have noticed that Jackie is out mainly only on mommy's weeks too...and the math teacher stated how important it is for Jackie to not miss anymore.....

I CANNOT control what happens at Lindsay's house unless I initiate a legal battle for custody change which she would probably fight....just to be difficult....

The doctor said Jackie MUST be seen in her clinic each time that Jackie misses....but therein lies the problem also...mommy won't take her to doctors visits MOST of the time! I'd say 98 out of every 100 times I take Jackie to the doctor....

I have talked to Jackie some about this stating that Jackie herself pointed out that she feels more unwell after spending a week at mommy's house...I said it isn't mommy -- it is the way you feel when you are at mommy's house based on everything going on around you that could be impacting you....I don't want her to try to blame anyone for anything....blame and guilt never did nothing for no one....or whatever that saying is....

I told her you would talk to her some tomorrow about how she is feeling in these matters too....

Willa (Jackie's best friend for a couple of years from elementary school is dying too -- and Jackie knows)...

Also Darcie....Jackie has been incredibly mean to me very often this week (and many others really) and pretends to not know what rude and disrespectful mean.....today....she had an appointment at Braces, Braces, Braces that I told her about last night....and this morning....and when she got home from school we had to go.....it is within a 1/2 mile stretch of where we presently live....but she was very aggressively ragefully angry toward me and was nearly so upset she hit me (but didn't)....she was shaking with uncontrollable rage because I told her we had to go to the appointment....

...She also said she wanted to get hit by the door and die....started banging her head hard on the wall at the dental place....she also jumped out of the car before it had stopped (and had taken her seat belt off) when we got there and I told her it was not safe to do that....she said....smart-alec-like .... 'what???? I thought you said we were in a hurry.....' -- Darcie I am going to tell you again that I am not able to handle that type of attitude or behavior....much of it is very similar to how her mother acts or how my mother acts and that can totally put me out of service for a day or longer.....I have reached my limit of being the target of emotional abuse.....I cannot handle anymore....

There are many more examples, and I can provide video or audio if it would be helpful....I am not saying that I am not doing anything wrong. I am sure that plenty that I do is not the best as a parent, but it is the best I can do at any given time....I am sure I make a lot of mistakes....I try my best....

Jackie's doctor also keeps using he/him despite me asking 6 or 7 times at least for her to be respectful toward Jackie and use she/her pronouns....

I know we need a new pcp....any ideas of a good one locally? Dr. Langford dropped us on the only day I asked for help with food from the food pantry and now this doctor seems to be not very considerate, respectful, or understanding....definitely not of chronic illness.

There was a time period where mommy just didn't give Jackie any medicine even for a week -- or maybe just skipped Jackie's adderall and didn't fill it for a week or something....I saw my divorce attorney at that time because I was so frustrated with her....this is harmful to my child....I am seeing a great level of emotional harm seemingly now that is occurring when Jackie is with mommy....the divorce attorney said in his 30 years of practice he never (maybe very incredibly rarely) has seen a case where a child is better off after a legal custody battle. He said that usually only causes more trauma for the child (which is the last thing I want for Jackie...she has been through enough!).....I can tell you that my observation is that Jackie is not well each time she comes back from mommy's house (emotionally and even manifesting itself physically)....examples of this objectively can be seen by looking at attendance records this year....however....Jackie does have chronic illness issues which muddies the waters -- so that must be considered also...

I can also tell you that I think COVID did cause some kind of problem with regard to Central Nervous System changes in my observation of behaviors over time - but again there are a TON of variables at play there...

Want to point this out too quickly/briefly....Jackie, when exhibiting shaking anger and range toward me...when she lunges at me...because she has indeed hurt me physically before (some of that injury is unrecoverable)...I recently learned I have osteoporosis in my lumbar spine....I need to not fall or get hit or whatever because my bones are very fragile at this point and spinal fractures and/or hip fractures...not only would it be painful...but it would likely lower my overall lifespan...so it is very serious....unfortunately.....the mean mortality/prognosis for males under 50 diagnosed with osteoporosis under 50 is 18.x years....I want to live past 63 though! So I am trying to do all I can to do so...honestly though...I have had some very serious health scares...I don't know how to talk to Jackie about this without it scaring her...but at the same time...I often feel like she would not even care....it hurts me to think about that though....

On more positive notes!!!

Jackie has done a great job in helping packing her stuff for our move, and I have managed to get most of it to the new apartment!! - on a more positive note.

Jackie got straight As again in the last reporting period!!

Jackie continues to show a great interest in learning new things, and that eagerness for learning makes me very proud of Jackie.

I love Jackie always with all my heart -- that will never ever change.

Attachments: image.png; image.png; image.png

She just says she was sick and throwing up but it doesn't happen very much at my house...and in 5th grade b4 I decided with Jackie that homeschooling was necessary, I often had to drive from the highlands to middletown to get Jackie and take Jackie to school on mommy's weeks because mommy didn't feel like it...or bc Jackie would puke 2 or 3 times per cyclical vomiting syndrome and be fine the rest of the day.

The absences were formerly in the 504 plan but the school didn't think it was necessary to keep them in. The doctor Mahajan is Jackie's pcp...Jackie's former pcp wrote for the extra absences totally fine...this pcp says she must be seen in clinic each time seemingly having no understanding of chronic illness...Lindsay is not going to take her to the doctor....

If you can write a note for Monday, I will have Monday and Friday of last week covered. We went to urgent care Friday night to get a note....Lindsay puts me in these positions that makes Jackie mad at me...is isn't right...it is controlling and abusive toward me but she just doesn't care that it causes harm to my relationship with Jackie.

Several Fridays Jackie has gotten to my house feeling ill and feels fine by the next day...or even feeling mentally not well in Jackie's own words, and then Jackie feels back to normal after a day or two.

I have the apt now so Jackie and I are trying to get out of dodge asap in terms of our own situation at my place...

But the patterns that are redeveloping are definite causes for concern in my eyes.

I can not write a note excusing Jackie for any days other than the ones when I see her (she did report to me that she didn't go to school Monday because she felt ill but I did not specifically see evidence of the illness necessarily, she participated fine). So I can easily write for days she has reported to me, in session, that she didn't go because she felt ill but by our medical standards I can only excuse days in which I see a child. I assume this may be the issue with the Pediatrician as well? Now....is that the Dr she sees for Chronic illness? Because while they can excuse specific days there might be a way to have the 504 include the increased absences due to chronic medical conditions. I assume that's part of the 504 currently?

Regarding the pattern, you as the parent, who has access to the records, absolutely have a right to call it in to CPS for educational neglect if you feel it's to that point. If school is at risk of expelling her for absences that might be an option. Although it doesn't seem like they will if it's part of her 504. Either way I am happy to address it with Jackie regarding the importance of attendance for getting work done and staying in good standing at Pheonix, I think she likes it there but I know lots of kids if offered the option to stay home might take it. What does Jackie say when you ask her?

- Here is a place that has online support groups for trans teens, some of them you would need to email to register, but they have the information on the page i've linked.

- This group also has an online support group for LGBTQ teens.

There are more options for online support groups if those don't work for her, but those are a good place to start.

These were provided to me by Oliver Hall, along with many other great resources. I am sending you Oliver's information in case other people need help navigating also.

See below for contact information.....

Can you please talk to Jackie about how online support groups (as opposed to no support group at all) could be helpful?

The dad part of me must tell you....drink as much fluid as you can....but if it lots of water make sure to add electrolytes...Real Salt brand salt works great....get rest...follow the b.r.a.t. diet...bananas, rice, applesauce and toast...and drink none broth for proteins and aminos.

Feel better!!

Subject: Need you to talk to Jackie about some things please

I have asked Jackie for help many times this week...often to be able to do more things Jackie wants...Jackie refuses the vast majority of the times and then acts like I never asked, or says she doesn't remember.

I had a cat get sick everywhere right before I had an appt.

I got back, started trying to figure out dinner...cleaned up maybe 12 cat puke areas mist of the way...got wet stuff and big chunks out of the way...

I asked Jackie to please get me in minecraft on my computer....no daddy....please Jackie...I'm exhausted...you don't help me with mist of the things I ask...plz log me on to minecraft....no daddy ... I told you no...well Darcie...I am exhausted...all the time...it sucks...I wish I wasn't, but it is my life.

I tried explaining to Jackie that I have a medicaid waiver, and that means I meet the level of care that nursing homes require. I told Jackie, I keep asking you for more help, and you keep telling me no to almost everything I ask..

I need help with this Darcie...

Also, Jackie had a 1 day mental health crisis because I said she had to stop playing computer games...she told me she wanted to die...I am the worst father ever in history...she said I don't care about her, love her or understand her at all...and that she wanted to be dead.. that screaming caused me to have a cataplexy event re narcolepsy...I couldn't even move...then she demanded I take her to a mental health hospital...and this was on Friday or Saturday night....I told her I couldn't because I couldn't drive and couldn't see and could barely move.

The next morning I asked if she was ok..she said yes...I told her that next time I can call 911 and ask for officers trained in mental health to come out.

Darcie one of my concerns I'd that Jackie lies a lot...I don't want her to make some kind of false statement that results in a fiasco of some kind.

Also, I have wondered at times if Jackie may be schizophrenic and wanted to gather your thoughts.

Jackie also said she drew out plans for her suicide and wanted to write her obituary.

The next days have been ok but extreme resistance to helping me and LOTS OF ANGER directed at me.

I don't know what to call it but I think Jackie has switched memories of me and her mother In her head...or is yelling at me and taking things out on me because she has been hurt by her mother. She even calls me mommy sometimes and calls mommy, daddy sometimes.

I learned about a grant for treatment for her but she won't even look at it with me...to me...that makes it seem like it is completely unimportant to her...puberty blocking and hormone therapy...what are your thoughts?

Also, I got her some 34a bras that have a small pad in them. How do we keep the appropriate illusion of breast growth rate?

I am going to have attendant care for 20 hours per week and may get up to 40...for me...how can I get Jackie to understand how sick I am or to even care?

Do you think we should still pursue aba therapy? Occupational therapy? Physical therapy? Jackie complains of a lot of pain.

Jackie's hearing aids are coming in on Jan 9 I believe for auditory processing.

Can you ask Jackie how important gender therapy is to her...and why she won't participate in any part of securing treatment?

Thanks Darcie - received. Yeppers - Jackie will see you tomorrow night at 6:30 p.m. (Wednesday). Eastern Standard Time.

Jackie seems to be very depressed surrounding Christmas -- and I cannot get her to talk about it. She just lashes at me if I ask, so maybe you and her can talk? She told me she doesn't really talk with you about anything. I told her that you are there to listen to her in a non-judgemental way...I am not sure if she 'heard' me though.

Subject: I don't even believe that I am needing to ask for this Darcie - but please see email...

Darcie,

My parents are both so disrespectful to me and my child -- lately it has been more my mom than my dad....my dad won't call Jack, Jackie or Jaqquelyn at all....my mom does about 50% of the time....when she doesn't....I correct her and say she/her if she says he/him, and I say please refer to my child as Jackie and use she/her.

She invited me upstairs to have lunch with her (my mom) and my dad....and I was hesitant to go because I am nearly always treated badly by her...

I went upstairs....the first thing was that she argued with me stating that a watch turns into a warning and that they are not 2 separate things - when I said - I don't know why you do not think I am ever right literally about anything but I am not going to put up with being treated that way, she went in the other room and started crying (or pretending to) - I really don't know....

Anyway - when she came back she started talking about watching "Jack" play sports when 'he' was little.....I said please call her Jackie and use she/her pronouns....her response was....well he's not here and it doesn't matter....

I said yes...it does matter....and I need you to be respectful....and I've asked you repeatedly to call her Jackie and use she/her and you keep not doing so, and that is disrespectful. I said I cannot tolerate the disrespectfulness anymore...and I said thank you for lunch, and I took my food and went downstairs....I told them before I went downstairs that I would ask for some kind of a letter from Jackie's therapist asking them to use she/her pronouns and refer to Jackie as she in the past, present, and future....not talk like....when "Jack was 4, before Jackie was acting like she is a girl...."...I'm sorry but that just is not okay. I am hopeful that you will understand where I am coming from. I don't know what else to do besides to ask you for something in support of Jackie's identity - if it is possible to mention that denying a child's identity is harmful to their mental health that would be great too.....I also need it for my sister and her children....

I love my parents and my sister and my nieces and nephews, but I need them to RESPECT both me and my child with regard to my child's identity. Can you write up a short few sentences or something? It would mean a great deal.

I just want us to be able to get the heck out of 'Dodge' but have not had luck with that yet despite extensive effort....I 'was' able to get the voucher extension (I think by a very good strike of fortune)...the extension was only for 2 months though and even though I have not received the document yet, it started from 12/3/2023 - so it has already been 6 days.....Jackie is traumatized when she is here despite me trying my best to protect her. Her mother is not mentally well (Jackie's) - so I don't want her to spend any extra time there...

Sometimes I feel like some of Jackie's depression has been 'learned' by modeling (not all of it).

Subject: Just something weird I have noticed

Darcie,

First of all - Jackie has been starting to play horror games and watch horror YouTube videos....I don't approve of that really and Jackie knows I would prefer her not to watch them, yet, at the same time, her friends are all into horror and I think she is just trying to have some sort of commonality with them so I am hesitant to state a flat-out .. "No" you cannot play those....so what I have done is try to limit the amount of exposure while at my house - and I have no control over what happens at my ex-wife's house....but just the other night...Jackie woke up SCREAMING 21 times....Darcie I have to have rest....I am very ill whether I want to admit it or not....it is especially important on the day before, during, and after IVIG because otherwise IVIG will not have nearly the same net effect....the reason why is yet to be understood....but basically less sleep equals less immune help.....IVIG in my case is acting as an immunomodulator....

So that is one thing...continuance of nightmares.....I did get Jackie an air mattress finally (because I could finally afford it....)....to sleep on instead of the thick yoga mat thing Jackie was using before...there is a bed she could sleep in, in the other room that she used to sleep in when she was six but she is very scared now and cannot do so....Darcie - it concerns me because I feel like there was evidence of brain damage from COVID but it is all subjective.....but it is almost like I have a totally different child (yet the same). I realize that makes absolutely no sense to you probably without further explanation....

Okay - so here is the other weird thing....Jackie has not worn bras or dresses for the last 2 weeks she was with me, and I don't think she wore them at mommy's house but don't know for sure (except for at a christmas party)....I find that strange....I have asked her non-chalantly a few times if she wants to wear a bra or any of the dresses she has in the closet and I get an immediate 'NO'. So I don't know what's up with that, and I am hoping you can try to talk to her without her knowing I really stated anything to you about that because I know it is a very sensitive subject area.

The other thing we need help with is finding a treating provider for puberty blockers and hormone level ongoing measurement and testing....SB 150 has made it very hard to try to find someone. Basically we have to find someone who is going to do the right thing morally and ethically.....'the only thing for evil to prevail in the world is for good men (and good women) to do nothing".....

Hope you are doing well. I am hoping to take Jackie to get her haircut and a wash before the session.

Happy St. Nick's Day.

Thank you Darcie. I'm sure everything is fine as is with the letter.

To get to a neuropsychiatrist, I need a referral, and my old pcp refused to write referrals very often...and medicaid, as you know, works like an hmo plan. Since I'm moving to a medicaid waiver, maybe things will be easier.

Thank you for helping Jackie with the letter, and for being a good listener for her and everything. I'm grateful.

However, I included the other two diagnoses that I am currently working with which are ASD and Anxiety. However....I do realize that does not present the whole of the diagnosis that Jackie presents with but since I'm not actually treating the ADHD or the depression (meaning they aren't things we have current treatment objectives for) I only included the three I have treatment objectives for on her current treatment plan. That being said, when you all meet with an Endocrinologist they will likely want the full diagnostic picture and the medical prescriber should have records of the full diagnostic picture and the things she is being treated for with meds. I don't mind including them in a letter at all but since they aren't listed in my current chart documentation (other than the copies of past diagnostic profiles you gave me which are included in the chart) I just put the three we are currently treating. If you feel they need to be added I can do that and just put in there that it's by history and report.

I feel like what you would need is a really good Neuropsych assessment and I wonder if your home health nurse might know of where to recommend you go? A Neuropsychologist should be able to start looking at those assessments or a Neurologist maybe as well. I'm surprised they didn't refer you to one when they did the MRI in 2022. Apologies that I don't know more in that area.

Darcie,

Can you please look at this article on demand avoidance and autism. I think Jackie experiences this along with Rejection Sensitivity Dysphoria --

Of course - I am not qualified to make these diagnoses -- but as Jackie's parent -- and as one who experiences the most time around Jackie -- and as one -- who at least at one time -- was very intelligent -- I feel like these are 100% relevant.

Demand avoidance (autism.org.uk)

I completely understand about not having time yet for the letter. I am just concerned for Jackie to get the treatment she needs to successfully continue to pass as a girl/woman without testosterone and estrogen and other hormonal shifts leading to more masculine tone and features....

I am trying to do the best that I can for Jackie...

Not an excuse just a reality. But I will do it tonight at 6:30 and get it to you this evening and then plan to see Jackie again next Monday. Does that work?

I need to know if you are going to be able to help Jackie with a letter, or if I need to look elsewhere. I am not trying to sound rude, or abrupt or anything -- I am just a very direct person -- and all my weeks are pretty much hell if I am being honest. I am trying to take care of my child the best that I can but I cannot do all things administrative on my own and keep up with all of them and I have no support to help me really.

If you have hesitation, can you tell me why?

I wish there were not such a high hurdle to cross just to be able to get into the PAGE clinic for them to do their own evaluation in endocrinology and to have access to those counselors etc... as stated before though -- I don't know if they are even able to do anything regarding SB 150's passage....

There is a telehealth appointment with Jackie's PCP in the morning and I am sure the letter will come up and she is going to ask us what is the status. I am already going to have to ask her for another referral to the page clinic as I think the other one expired.

If there is something you need from me on my end, that I have not provided, please let me know, and I will get it to you.

So update after pcp appt this morning...page clinic is no longer accepting people...only possibility is to go out of state for care or work with therapist. Page clinic is giving list of options. When Dr. Mahajan PCP gets that list and sends to me, I will also forward to you. Still probably need letter for care.

Subject: Next Tuesday Will Work Just Fine

Thank you Darcie.

I appreciate you scheduling a parent session to discuss it....I don't know what is going on....but it is getting worse and worse....and I can barely handle it...honestly....I have to be able to ask Jackie to do things sometimes like (put on clean underwear....or please take a shower or bath.....or please take your dirty dishes to the dishwasher....etc....none of the requests are outside the scope of normal in any way - and honestly I need help with a lot of things - but I know I am not able to ask Jackie for help because Jackie might get so upset that she tries to hurt me.....and that is not okay by me...I taught her better than that...and the strange thing is....she used to understand the difference between the right and the wrong way to treat people, but doesn't anymore apparently....or apparently it is actually only directed toward me....and I am not an emotional punching bag....if that makes sense....

I will try to send you some video examples -- Jackie knows I've recorded some videos - so it isn't a surprise or anything...I told her I need to be able to show her examples of her behavior....the thing is....when I show her things sometimes like her own behavior....she doesn't apologize....she thinks it is funny.....and that also isn't okay....

It is my job, as a parent, to raise my child, to be the most successful she can be in her life, and to give her love, and to make sure her needs are met. I am trying to do all of those and much more....and I am struggling a great deal due to my own physical and mental health issues.

On a more positive note... I found out from the Housing Authority (LMHA) that the voucher standard amounts for apartments increased in October...also found out they don't tell you they increase unless you call them and ask them....also found out that most areas around Jackie's school are in 'exception' areas -- which means -- LMHA can approve 120% of the voucher amount and possibly even more based on HUD and LMHA standards. The old amount was $1556....most places require a $250 allowance for utilities to be built into the voucher (which doesn't make any sense - because you don't get to keep any overage....)....but whatever...so the old amount $1556 minus $250 = $1,306 [It has been very hard to try to find any place anywhere in the East End for that price for a 3 bedroom]. The new amount is $1722 minus $250 = $1472 (still low for that area)....but....if you factor in 20% over for $1722 you get $2066.40 minus $250 = $1816.40 -- that is MUCH MORE REALISTIC in terms of the areas where I have been looking. The voucher expires 12/2/2023. It took me 9 months just to even get the damn thing -- and it is supposed to take 4 weeks for N.E.D. vouchers....They gave me less than 4 months to find a place to use it and I have been looking like crazy, but it hasn't been possible to find a place due to too low of a voucher amount which I have had no control over....most places require 17 days to process the voucher so I am stressed and running out of time.

Also on a positive note - I am getting our 2 cats certified as emotional support animals (officially), so we will not be charged a pet deposit or a monthly pet rental fee in addition to the other fees. It is not legal to do that...for a landlord to charge extra for emotional support animals....etc...

Anyway - talk to you on Tuesday in the morn.

When I asked her why - she said because she wants to do schoolwork during lunch.

I asked her what her friends do during lunch, and she said that they eat lunch....

Jackie is very HANGRY!!!!!!!!!! when Jackie gets home because all Jackie has is a Gogurt in the morning (one skinny popsicle sized serving of yogurt)....dinner isn't until six....

Jackie will scream or yell at me....because I 'don't understand something' as happened tonight, and I will tell her that she does not have the right to yell or scream at me, and she will then say that she never screamed, and that I was the one screaming, just if I even say I don't understand something - and the lies and continuing behavioral issues and escalation of lies are not okay.....

Can you help???

Darcie,

If I ask Jackie to do literally anything, Jackie starts shouting at me, then says I was shouting at her...if I ask her to do anything she doesn't want to do...then lies about everything that happened...and this has happened many times this week...

If I ever try to talk to her about it...she says she is too tired...or that she will have a crisis if we talk about anything...

This week has been very hard on me. I told Jackie that and she just doesn't care one iota...

I've told her I need her to treat me better and she just says no ... that she never will ... that she never wants to see me again... never wants to do anything with me again ... etc...

As an example of what could set this off...I might say, Jackie, can you please turn down the TV? Then there is a 3 hour fight on my hands...or I might say...I folded your clothes, please put them away...same thing...here lately she has not wanted to go to school every day...and I don't have the energy to fight with her to go....especially in the mornings...

She was fine evert day of break...but on Monday said she was sick...Tuesday, pic day, was better...Wed morning was very difficult....

Can you help me out here? With having Jackie treat me better, please?

There have been good moments too this week, but this other, negative behavior becomes more and more anytime Jackie is around me.

I don't deserve to be treated the way she treats me...and according to her...I am the only one that she treats like that...

When I ask her why...she says it is because I'm the one that takes her to the doctor when she is sick, and makes sure she is prepared for school, and has clothes, and takes her to get haircuts...so...I'm at a loss....

Just need some advice on what I need to do...

Subject: Not sure if Jackie has therapy with you next week since it is October break for the kids - is therapy still happening? It is Lindsay's week next week - you may need to reach out to her...

Lindsay's phone number, for handy reference is 502.475.6897.

Mine is not included in my signature because of a stalker I had that was dangerous (literally) - and I had to change my phone number, but that's a whole other story.... I'll give my number to you - and you have it anyway - 502.956.0052 - in case you need to reach out to me.

I'd like to ask if you will be able to write the gender affirming letter soon, please. I know about a week ago (well on Tuesday morning actually) - we spoke and you said that you would be able to - and I know that you are very busy - I was hoping to get a time frame estimate from you on that.

Also - I did not know if you might be able to help with the PAGE clinic thing in general - I have contacted them a few times and they have stopped responding to any communication - probably because they think we can't get the letter (not because of you in any way - but because we have had so much trouble before making it to you...)...I may have to start over again - get another referral letter from PCP - etc...

So - need some help additionally in these areas:

* Transgender clothing - like how to tuck male parts - have no idea what is needed. I'm Cis-Male. Can you help me understand what is needed for Jackie? And what free resources may exist?

* If there is a way to get a grant to afford name change officially - I think the time to do that is now....I don't think it will mess up any benefits. I asked SSA if the social security number would be the same and they said yes - and everything is tied to social security number - so that should not be an issue.

* THANK YOU SO MUCH FOR TALKING TO JACKIE ABOUT THE ATTITUDE. You have to understand that up until about 6 months ago, it was not like that the majority of every day - it is now. I have a very hard time tolerating the negative energy - it triggers me - and makes me incapacitated at times....due to narcolepsy trigger with cataplexy or just general negative energy - I have no negative energy shield remaining anymore. I am working with Theresa and my other regular non-therapist (Maddy) on that....not moving in the right direction fast enough probably but trying my best....I just wanted to tell you I appreciate you validating that Jackie was not being nice to me. If I say or do ANYTHING it makes the situation much worse. Before roughly 6 months ago, there were definite 'episodes' of days or weeks where Jackie would act like that - but not every single day. I just try to celebrate the small victories and go from there...

* Need help finding grant money for something for Christmas for Jackie.

* Was able to get clothing through the CAP program for both me and Jackie which was greatly needed.

If you know of anything that may help Jackie - please let me know - aside from what is already being worked on - and thank you Darcie for helping my child.

Hi Darcie.

Something I struggle with is when it is appropriate to make formal name change for Jaqquelyn - do you think it is appropriate now? It is beginning to cause issues for Jackie (e.g. doctor's note has to say 'Jack' because that is the legal name for insurance etc...but the school record is for Jaqquelyn....)....any advice?

John

p.s. Jackie continues to have many nightmares and wake up screaming and scared. I really want to help her with the issues. The sleep test had to be moved that was scheduled for last Sunday because Jackie was sick all last week and the results would have been skewed. It has been rescheduled for March of next year (that was the first available). I am on the cancellation list and will be notified if something sooner becomes available.

Darcie,

Thanks so much for your time this morning. I'm so glad to hear you are taking care of the dust at your place, literally... Jackie and I both have pretty severe dust allergies and dust mite allergies, and asthma, so it's great to hear you take care of things!! I've been trying to help my parents clean their home, but they don't appreciate the help so I've had to 'grin and bear it' as they say...

Attached, please find a copy of the 504 plan in draft form - I realized I do not have a copy of the finalized form, so I asked Jennifer Rullan (Counselor a school) for a copy of the final form - but it should be the same as this one.

Also, please see below, screenshots of an anger workbook we completed as part of homeschool - because I believe strongly - that emotional intelligence and education is as important if not more so than intellectual intelligence and education.

Also, please find attached, information about Gastroparesis from NORD (National Organization for Rare Disorders), and information / screenshots of two emotions wheels Jackie used with Akhilah and Dani - former art therapists (or Akhilah is still there I guess) - but Jackie seemed to be improving on recognizing emotions by utilizing the emotions wheels...

Jackie even made a game with Akhilah that was pretty cool - maybe you and she could play it sometime.

I have Jackie now set up at 5:30pm every other Monday at her mom's house on those weeks and every other Wednesday at 6:30pm at your house on your weeks. I spoke with Lindsay and asked if that time would work and she seemed to think it would. I would love to be able to offer a 4pm appt but I currently don't have one. I could likely do a 3:30pm on her mom's weeks but I don't think she's home by then? Most of my afternoon appts are on the half hour. The 4pm the other day was sort of an anomaly in my schedule. So, I will plan to see Jackie at 5:30pm next Monday. If an earlier time comes up on those weeks I will make sure to let her know. Thanks!

Darcie,

Jackie really seemed to like the Monday at 4pm that she had to meet with you at mommy's house -- because she said no one else was there.

I gave her complete privacy. I think she knows I do not eavesdrop on her or anything...pray for us that we will soon have our own place. I am completely exhausted in trying to find a way to use the housing choice voucher we have.

Anyway - if you are able to meet with Jackie around the same time next week, that you did last week (Monday at 4 I think is what it was), I think Jackie would really like that - if you cannot - totally understand.

I told Jackie I'd ask you.

Thank you Darcie.

Wednesday will work out the best on my weeks - thanks for being understanding that IVIG days are tough for me. Jackie said she had a good session with you, and was really kind of upbeat about everything. Then she asked me to play Minecraft with her...so I did...then she asked me to look up Jewel Cave in South Dakota - so I did - it is related to a school project apparently. Then she told me to log in to her school classroom gmail account...so I tried...but it wouldn't work on my computer. Then she told me that I was entering the information wrong (even though I wasn't)....and I showed her I entered what she said...then she said that I am the one doing it wrong (again) and very ANGRILY....then she almost threw her computer on the ground out of anger....then she started yelling at me to give her my computer....I said you can try it - but you already see it won't work...I said I don't understand why you are so angry with 'me'. She said SHE JUST IS!!!! BECAUSE I DO EVERYTHING WRONG!. So I just didn't say anything for a few minutes - then she got mad because I wasn't playing. I said I was waiting for a few minutes so we could both calm down. I said I need you to think about your behavior and then I need you to tell me you are sorry for how you treated me. She said 'I didn't treat you badly'. I said yes you did...she said no I didn't....I said you were just yelling at me...etc...power struggles 101....She was not like this 2 months ago....she was not like this '90% of the time 2 months ago I should say...'....it was maybe 25% of the time 2 months ago...and when we moved into my parents house in January it was maybe 10-25% of the time.....I need help in dealing with those types of situations...that kind of energy suck/draw - destroys my entire energy for a day - or longer - due to the illness issues I am battling - I have tried to talk to Jackie about it - but she honestly just does not give a crap...

Thanks for working out the details on the scheduling, and for fixing the telehealth session earlier, and for meeting with her this week.

Let's set up a time for you and I to meet outside of Jackie's session. I keep starting an email back to you and get sidetracked by sessions and such. BUT I do think it's helpful to address and I know how hard it is for Jackie when you are in her sessions. Could you do next Tuesday, 9/19 at 9:30am? I know it's the week she is with her mom.

Regarding eating, remind me what Meds Jackie takes. I do think that it's not wholly unusual for kids her age not to eat during the day, especially depending on different medications but I'm happy to talk with her about it during session for sure. I do get the importance of nutrition for kids I just know there is limited time for eating and lots of kids have lots of reasons why they don't eat at school that isn't because they are having any specific food related issues. Sometimes kids just don't and I think sometimes making sure they have plenty of options for snacks and breakfast and dinner and times they are not at school is the best and then having a pediatrician just make sure (not all the time but at regular appts) that the weight isn't dropping drastically is the best option. It's especially not strange for girls and kids with sensory related issues which is what I'm assuming the hand washing relates to. It could be related to body image issues but I don't get that feel from her at least not in the first couple of sessions, I will continue to monitor as well. It definitely could also be related to the stomach issues she currently already has but for sure if there are recommendations that her doctor has said she needs to follow those would be the things I would want to do.

I want to make sure that I have the list of things you would like me to address down (in addition to the letter which is on my radar) from various emails as I feel I may have missed some:

- Night terrors
- Video Game Disorder
- Following up with Stacy to make sure we are OK with keeping Case management
- Difficulties in communication that seem to have increased (as she gets older and doesn't want to talk as much)

If there are others please let me know. I will happily follow up with another email as soon as I am able regarding these other concerns I have listed and again extend the invitation for you and I to meet and touch based next week if you would like. I completely get the concerns and fears related to Jackie and I think it's very normal to worry about our kids and parenting them as they get older is so hard and it's hard to realize they need/want to separate from us in age appropriate ways for sure.

I look forward to seeing Jackie this evening. Let me know if next week will work for you!

9:30 am on 9/19 will work fine - we got lucky - I have so many doctor appointments it is often hard to find time for anything. I am the parent of Jackie's that is involved with Jackie's care - and that is why Jackie resents me - it doesn't really make sense to me...but it is what it is...

> Regarding eating, remind me what Meds Jackie takes.

Please see list attached. Jackie does not take fluoxetine - she decided not ever to take it (and has never taken it). Jackie has also not taken Rizatriptan due to potential side effects, and has the Lidocaine patches to use PRN for foot pain issues.

> I do think that it's not wholly unusual for kids her age not to eat during the day, especially depending on different medications but I'm happy to talk with her about it during session for sure.

Well - the meds have not changed...but the eating habits at lunch are very suddenly different - only since starting at The Phoenix School...I would appreciate it if you would speak to her about it please.

> I do get the importance of nutrition for kids I just know there is limited time for eating and lots of kids have lots of reasons why they don't eat at school that isn't because they are having any specific food related issues.

Jackie's reasons have been:

 The line is too long
 The second part of lunch goes by too fast
 Her feet were itching when she stood still for too long
 She couldn't wash her hands after lunch or didn't want to
 The food was too spicy
 Today it was the line was too long again...

> Sometimes kids just don't and I think sometimes making sure they have plenty of options for snacks and breakfast and dinner and times they are not at school is the best and then having a pediatrician just make sure (not all the time but at regular appts) that the weight isn't dropping drastically is the best option. It's especially not strange for girls and kids with sensory related issues which is what I'm assuming the hand washing relates to.

I'm sure the washing hands is partly sensory - and partly because Jackie wants to follow the rules and was told not to go to the bathroom at lunch even though she has the right via 504 plan to go at any time.

I can tell when Jackie has not eaten because she is VERY HANGRY after school.

I think it is partly body image too...she says often that she thinks she is fat.

Part of my concern is that she does not like to eat breakfast either, often eating only 2 or 3 bites literally of cereal...and tries to skip dinner often....you cannot go days without eating and remain healthy - especially not when you already have underlying health problems - and genetic predisposition (see monoallelic TACI mutation)...

At mommy's I get very concerned about some of the things I hear about - but I am not there and do not know what really happens...

That's the hard part for me - because some things emotionally and socially are WAY below age level norm - and others are normal - so I don't know how to hit a constantly moving target that goes above and way below constantly - if that makes sense....

Subject: Re: This week upcoming -- 2023-09-10 -- Jaqquelyn/Jackie Fouts -- Scheduling

Thanks Darcie. So this week 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday is what I'll put on the calendar.

Ironically, today, I made the best time to school in the morning (40 minutes) - best time yet this year! And on the way back set a record too at 28 minutes! Maybe the traffic on my other week was coincidental due to being near the start of the school year? Or just random in general.

As soon as I can move closer to the school, there will be more time available - and it will help everyone involved.

Thanks for being understanding regarding the concerns too. Another concern I have is about Jackie's nightmares / night terrors. Jackie ends up screaming several times per night. I've also attached the criteria for video gaming

About gaming disorder:

"The condition is "characterized by impaired control over gaming, increasing priority given to gaming over other activities to the extent that gaming takes precedence over other interests and daily activities, and continuation or escalation of gaming despite the occurrence of negative consequences." To be diagnosed, a person must be exhibiting symptoms for 12 months or more and be impaired by them in personal, family, social, educational, occupational, or other important areas of functioning.
"I think the ICD-11 category will give us a chance to learn how to identify and diagnose the disorder," says child and adolescent psychiatrist Victor Fornari, MD."

Please see the attached link to a file as one example of Jackie's night terrors - these happen several times each night. At least each night that Jackie is with me, I hear her have several of these - I wake up panicked sometimes because of how intense and fearful Jackie sounds, and I am very worried about what she is dreaming about - want her to not feel scared or anxious in any way - and have no idea why she is dreaming such intense things, so of course I am concerned.

Ironically, Jackie's doctor just struck nightmares out of the medical record, and I don't know why...

Jackie's nightmares -- example from -- 2023-09-10 (night of)

These night terrors happen anywhere from just a few times, to as many as 15 to 16 times (maximum I have awoken to) per night.

Jackie used to not have these, so I don't know why she started having them.

Safe travels!

I have that appt every other Monday at 6:30 which will likely fall on your weeks. I will look at my calendar tonight when I get home to determine what we could do on your weeks moving forward since the 5:30 doesn't work on Mondays and find you a time for another day. Apologies for the delay in reply as I have been traveling.

I will also respond to your other concerns upon my return to regular work hours tomorrow.

Thanks.

Be excellent to each other.

I am really hoping you will be able to meet with Jackie on Monday sometime. If not, however, I understand. Other possible times listed below.

Monday --> 6 or after ...

Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday --> 5:30 or after ...

Friday --> Transition day so off the docket ...

Will any of these times work? If not, then Jackie can meet a little bitty bit earlier, but would be in the car with me, without privacy, on the way home from school, which would not be ideal - but we will try to do whatever we can to make it work.

Subject: More Concerns For Jackie - not trying to blow up your email - but I have definite concerns that I do not know how to handle - and need some guidance - to be the best parent I can be - 2023-09-09

First concern:

Eating Disorder Possibility - already noted so won't go into detail again here. If you have any guidance here, please share. I'm going to write to the school counselor (not therapist), to help keep an eye on Jackie's eating habits at lunch at school. I know she has not eaten lunch several days.

Next concern:

Jackie saying she said things she did not say, or Jackie saying she didn't say things when she did -- this happens extremely frequently.
In Jackie's own words, but not tied directly to that first statement (probably indirectly), Jackie says she keeps getting confused between reality and imagination.
How am I supposed to handle this? Do you have any guidance?

Concern after that:

Jackie lies ... A LOT ... and it drives me nuts. It is to the point that I'm ready to pull my hair out. It actually has a very negative profound effect on me. I HATE LIES. I grew up in a house full of lies, and it is very important to me for there to be honesty. I cannot really go into detail about my childhood, but suffice it to say it was traumatic. If I call Jackie out on a lie, she says she didn't lie, and never said that. She says that I lie, but I do not lie to her...so I don't know what to do with that statement. Many parents in the past have told me I should not be so honest with my child. My parents have said the same. How am I supposed to handle this - how do I get Jackie to reduce all the lying that is taking place? Do you have any guidance? I don't get any help from the other parent in terms of any kind of co-parenting or tips/tricks etc... or any contribution to parenting for situations like this.

Last concern to note for now:

Jackie mis-interprets tone, and I don't know how to help there either. If I ever make 'any' suggestions, or make 'any' kind of statement of correction of 'any' kind, I have a full blown either mental health crisis from Jackie on my hands, or an extremely angry and argumentative Jackie on my hands - I just don't know what to do here either. I know that other therapists from the past have witnessed Jackie misinterpreting tone personally, and I know that we all do this from time to time. I'll see if I can find a short video example illustrating more along the lines of what I mean.

Also wanted to mention that I try to keep my doctor appointments outside of the time that Jackie is with me - the problem is - I have SO MANY that it is very hard to do sometimes. My PCP forced me to be farmed back out to a bunch of specialists...I'm trying to get a better handle on whittling down those appointments in general so by the time October break, or Christmas comes along that I am not stuck dragging Jackie along to appointments she does not want to go to.

Darcie,

I live in Shepherdsville right now. At 3:00 or after, it generally takes an hour to get home - sometimes 2 hours if there is a wreck. So the VERY SOONEST that we could get home, generally would be.... Jackie's school ends at 3:20...but the students are not all out until about 3:40...I have only one week of experience with the new school, so don't know if that is normal or not. Assuming that is normal....4:40 is the absolute soonest we would be walking in the door - we had one day last week where we didn't get home until close to 6 due to traffic and wrecks. I am trying my best to get closer to the school as soon as possible. I have the housing choice voucher, but I'm finding it hard to find a place that will take it. If you look up the time on maps.google.com it says 27 minutes....but that does not account for morning nor evening rush hour traffic. It takes us a solid 45 min to an hour to get there in the mornings as well - so we really need a slightly later time on the other days too. Fridays are out because of it being a transition day.....so has to be Tue, Wed, or Thurs. One other wrench to throw in is that every 52 days, I have to go to Norton Cancer Center to have a Copper infusion due to a copper deficiency issue I have.

I'm pasting the next 2 of my weeks on my calendar right now as things stand....

Hopefully this will help you see more of the time commitment I have that is, unfortunately, largely committed to transportation...and Darcie...it is VERY HARD ON ME...I am barely able to do it, and won't be able to long-term due to the autoimmune issues, so I am feeling lots of pressure to move ASAP closer, but I cannot move if there is no place in that area that takes the voucher - I have to wait it out - it is a tough position. Of course Jackie is in school in the middle of the days. The orange blocks at the bottom don't need to count for the purpose of scheduling therapy - so therapy could be scheduled during any of the orange block times (just not if there are any other pre-existing commitments). (e.g. on the 28th of September, there is a Kosair Farm Festival that I had to RSVP for to get Jackie a free pumpkin and hayrides and stuff like that.)

The MyHealthMatters group may also be ignored. I do have concerns about some other things for Jackie too - Video Gaming Disorder which Jackie well meets the criteria for...and I am seeing an unhealthy eating pattern that is developing, and maybe more....Jackie, the first full week of school, did not eat lunch there for at least 1 day, the next week, also did not eat lunch for at least one day...this week, Jackie told me she was out today again (on the Friday of mommy's week - again - pattern?), and she said that she did not eat lunch for 2 of the days that she was there this week. When I asked her why...she said because she would have to wash her hands afterward, and she does not want to have to do that....I suspect self-image issues. The last 2 times on Friday when Jackie came here for dinner, she said she did not want to eat dinner. At mommy's house, she also does not eat breakfast...but I have her eat breakfast here....I am concerned about the developments I am seeing there, because, especially, of all the other physical conditions like Gastroparesis that Jackie has going on.

I just had someone move off of Wednesdays and while 3:30 will ALWAYS work I might be able to do 4:30 as well - I'm assuming 4:30 would be easier for school. :-) Let me know if that works for next week and which time is better.

I do well to get Jackie to school by 8:30/8:40 when we leave Shepherdsville at 7:45 (due to morning rush hour traffic). Mornings are also really tough for me. As soon as I get Jackie to school, I turn around and rush back to Shepherdsville, to meet my nurse, whose name is Whitney (presently) - I have had several nurses since May 2021 when IVIG infusions started - Jackie may talk about Whitney sometimes.

Anyway - it takes time, sometimes, to get an IV going - it depends on how dehydrated my body is at any given time, and how many sticks it takes, etc...then the pre-infusion saline takes about 1 hour to run in.

Let's say Whitney starts the IV at 9:30 without any issues, then 1 hour for the saline would put it at 10:30...then 4 solid hours for the IVIG to infuse puts it a 2:30...then say 45 minutes for the post infusion saline puts the time at 3:15pm, then there is generally 15 minutes for observation afterward and for nurse to clean things up in terms of supplies used etc...so 3:30...then 45 minutes to get to Phoenix School (which gets out at 3:20 - so Jackie walked to mommy's house until I could pick her up on the last Monday of my week due to IVIG taking so long)...so that puts me there at 4:15 -- then if I immediately turned around and went back to Shepherdsville that would take me probably at least until 5:15 due to rush hour traffic in the evening -- and there is no margin of error for anything in there - like needing to use the bathroom e.g.....wrecks on the highway e.g. etc....

Can we make it 6pm on Mondays on my weeks? That is still really pushing it for me, but I am trying to make as close to your time you listed as possible...

I do well to get Jackie to school by 8:30/8:40 when we leave Shepherdsville at 7:45 (due to morning rush hour traffic). Mornings are also really tough for me. As soon as I get Jackie to school, I turn around and rush back to Shepherdsville, to meet my nurse, whose name is Whitney (presently) - I have had several nurses since May 2021 when IVIG infusions started - Jackie may talk about Whitney sometimes.

Anyway - it takes time, sometimes, to get an IV going - it depends on how dehydrated my body is at any given time, and how many sticks it takes, etc...then the pre-infusion saline takes about 1 hour to run in.

Let's say Whitney starts the IV at 9:30 without any issues, then 1 hour for the saline would put it at 10:30...then 4 solid hours for the IVIG to infuse puts it a 2:30...then say 45 minutes for the post infusion saline puts the time at 3:15pm, then there is generally 15 minutes for observation afterward and for nurse to clean things up in terms of supplies used etc...so 3:30...then 45 minutes to get to Phoenix School (which gets out at 3:20 - so Jackie walked to mommy's house until I could pick her up on the last Monday of my week due to IVIG taking so long)...so that puts me there at 4:15 -- then if I immediately turned around and went back to Shepherdsville that would take me probably at least until 5:15 due to rush hour traffic in the evening -- and there is no margin of error for anything in there - like needing to use the bathroom e.g.....wrecks on the highway e.g. etc....

Can we make it 6pm on Mondays on my weeks? That is still really pushing it for me, but I am trying to make as close to your time you listed as possible...

Darcie,

Thanks for the summary. 5:30 on Monday will probably be okay, and we can try that. It is okay on my end. Mommy's email is lindsayfoutscpa@gmail.com. On my end, however, I may be feeling very unwell on Monday evenings because that is the day I receive IVIG infusions (which shouldn't affect Jackie for her session), but I may be ... not all the way myself -- more fatigued even than normal...kind of out of it...maybe the same as I normally am...I never know. IVIG is IgG from 1,000 to 60,000 donors in each bottle (that have donated their IgG antibodies). Medicaid is covering it at this time, but there has been a legal battle for the entire year. IVIG is billed out at $10,000 to $15,000 per week....I have a nurse that on occasion may still be here at 5:30 as well, but normally she is gone by 5:00. That might give us time to eat in between, or we can eat after... Jackie gets 'hangry' often.

Stacy Polk, our case worker, said if Jackie was not receiving therapy at school weekly (I think she said at school...but now I am thinking maybe she just said weekly)...that we would lose case services....it would just be any regular therapy per week wouldn't it? Can you check with her? She is at Seven County Services too.

I will defer to your expertise about the in-school sessions. If, however, problems start to develop, I would like to leave the option of Jackie seeing Mr. Charlie 'on the table' so to speak - if possible.

I'm so glad she loves the new school. I knew she would. The old school, part of the issue, was that everyone knew her as a boy (Jack), and I think that was causing a great deal of distress (in hindsight).

Maybe you can help with this for Jackie (from my perspective). I feel like I have lost a connection with Jackie, and I don't know why...I don't know if it is gender related...I don't know what it is...she doesn't talk to me in the same way..and it seems to go far beyond the lack of depth that is typical for teenagers - and I don't understand why...

Anyway - thanks again for the summary, and the suggested meeting time. On my end, I'll make it work.

She does not identify any at this time and stated she really likes the new school and that she feels missing class would cause her anxiety rather than be helpful. I do know some kids just feel this is true. We did talk a little about the session and how it went and her frustration with you regarding feeling like she didn't have a choice in the matter. I do think she will be OK without school services at this time unless there are specific school issues to address. I am also happy to work on those as well if needed.

Darcie,

I thought this was sent to you already. Jackie was evaluated by Dr. David Charles at Meridian Behavioral Health in 2022 (neuropsychiatrist) -- who determined Autism Spectrum Disorder Level II, and reconfirmed the ADHD diagnosis.

I hope you understand I am not trying to ask you to do anything unethical. Although civil disobedience is at times necessary....e.g. in the case of standing up against the new law SB 150 that abuses transgendered youth! Anyway - I understand your position. When you are comfortable, please write the letter - and yes there is a sense of urgency because once certain changes take place they are not undo-able. I know you understand that too.

I would not be doing my duty as a parent, nor being professional as a parent, if I were not staunchly advocating for the best interest of my child constantly and in a permanent way.

I have not read Civil Disobedience by Thoreau - maybe it is time for me to do so...have to be an audio book because I am having so much eye trouble...

More on autism -- if you look back through Jackie's records Autism was suggested many times -- and I feel strongly like it should have been diagnosed when Jackie was 3 or 4.

See records from Lara West in Corydon from previously sent files (I think I sent you a bunch of files for Jackie). See records from Dr. Stockhammer (StrongMinds) etc....those records, I thought, were also sent previously...lmk if you need them.

As one example, when Jackie was younger, Jackie WOULD NOT go to sleep or even lay down...unless all the stuffed animals were in a specific order in a specific way all around the bed in like a protective ring...and they had to be very specifically organized...

Jackie often spun around when younger, and would not stop spinning....or still at times runs up to random strangers at the store and starts talking to them or used to give random strangers hugs.

Even now, randomly says hi to people in inappropriate ways...e.g. taking a walk - shouting at people far down across the street saying HI!!!!!

Trust me when I say -- I want to make sure of Jackie's gender identity wants/needs/desires more than anyone else. I feel like there was one specific day when things flipped...part of me thinks that Jackie was brainwashed by emotional neglect and emotional abuse from her mother...her mother also has/had a count of physical abuse toward Jackie in the past when Jackie was 6 years old...when we temporarily lived in Colorado. I wrote to CPS to tell them I thought it was a one time thing, but I can tell you with certainty that a lot of emotional abuse has taken place (Jackie's mom to Jackie) ... one example is when she told Jackie that Jackie was the 'shittiest excuse of a child'. My heart BROKE when I heard about that.

Jackie was in fifth grade...and Jackie had started being home schooled - so after 2/22/2022...and Jackie was at my house during mom's weeks while mom worked...Jackie resents me for homeschooling even though it is what Jackie said she needed -- but the resentment comes from her doing homeschool at my house during mom's weeks - which was mom's decision....so I am the innocent bystander getting gunned down...

Anyway - Jackie had been feeling really really hurt by things that had been happening between her mother and her, and I said I will talk to mommy with you when she comes if you want me to...and Jackie poured out her heart (still Jack back then)...

I sat in the car and listened to Jack to mommy how (he) felt -- for about 10 minutes of gut-wrenching, soul-scorching, extremely raw SAD emotion, finalizing with Jack saying mommy - you've hurt me so much I just don't think you love me anymore... Jack(ie) did a great job voicing her emotions...but mommy said 'I am not going to sit here and listen to this...I just want to go home...we are leaving'. That was her response (when she was picking up Jackie from my house after she got off work on a homeschool day during her week). I asked Jack(ie) if they ever talked anymore, and she said no...

I cannot get mommy to do things that will help Jackie...like I have been trying to get her to send Kosair her pay stubs from U of L because they need those to finalize a hearing aid application for Jackie, or fill out SSI functional form from the other parent side, etc... I cannot make her do things that she NEEDS to do to help Jackie.

After that day when Jackie spilled out her emotions to mommy in the car, it was like a light switch flipped, and Jackie suddenly began only identifying with mommy...so I do definitely have concerns that emotional abuse has played a role in this gender transformation ideology that Jackie has now...

I don't know how to sort that out as I am not an expert on psyche' or ego or id or any of those things.....all I can tell you is that suddenly Jackie's perception and reality shifted very dynamically - that was also the time period when Jackie was having a lot of hallucinations, and paranoia, and when more of that began...so I feel like it must play some kind of a role. To help better the understanding of the specifics I am talking about, I have included an article and a link...mommy also talks negatively of me constantly to Jackie...I try not to say anything one way or the other about mommy to Jackie...I honestly don't know what to say or do if that comes up...so I tend to acknowledge Jackie's statement whatever it is, and then steer the subject elsewhere.

After that one day, Jackie started to 'hate' me and tell me mean things, and be extremely nice to mommy, and prefer to be at mommy's house. I can tell you also that mommy only really paid close attention to Jackie when she started painting her fingernails or things like that. Mommy always wanted a girl.

I just want Jackie to be who Jackie truly is. Herself. Whether he identifies as he/him, they/them, she/her, I don't care - as long as Jackie is true to her heart and her soul and who she is at a core and fundamental level.

Parental Alienation is what I am thinking could be going on - I could not think of it until I looked it up again...but mommy takes Jackie to do all these fun things and out to eat on a lot of days, and as an example, she would not sign a document for 6 months that would have allowed me to get 450 per month KTAP so I lost out on $2400+ dollars because she would not sign a document, it took well over 6 months to get a passport because she kept not signing a form that was required for Jackie to get her passport renewed and things like that...mommy controls how Jackie has fun basically is what I am saying...and at my house...I have no money...so am very limited about what I am able to do for Jackie...with that...and her talking badly to Jackie about me all the time, I feel that I am being emotionally alienated in terms of how Jackie views me, and I wonder if that plays a role in the gender thing.

If you need anything else, please let me know. Charlie introduced himself as Charlie Sawyer to me, so I am going to refer to him as Charlie....around Jackie I will call him Mr. Charlie because that is what he told Jackie to call him. Do you want me to call you Ms. Darcie around Jackie? Please let me know.

Thanks Darcie for looking out for the well-being of my child psychologically.

I can appreciate the desire for urgency in the letter but I would not be doing my due diligence (nor would they accept a letter from me) if I wrote it after one session of intake. Part of the letter specifies the length of time I have seen a child and one session won't really be enough for us to make a determination. Even the Social Worker at the Page clinic often wants to meet with an individual at least 3-4 times before they sign off on scheduling with the Endocrinologist. They used to have a Social Worker on staff down there specifically to meet with kids and make those determinations which is often who you would meet with first but I suspect with HB 150 in place they have changed that policy or they have lost that position - either way I promise we will be working towards it and I will write it when I am ready and feel like it's appropriate to do so. I do understand that those changes are hard to watch happen but it's imperative that I, as the professional you are asking to write the letter, do my best to meet the ethical guidelines of practice set forth by my license. So I need to meet with Jackie a few times before we get to that point.

I thought this was sent to you already. Jackie was evaluated by Dr. David Charles at Meridian Behavioral Health in 2022 (neuropsychiatrist) -- who determined Autism Spectrum Disorder Level II, and reconfirmed the ADHD diagnosis.

I hope you understand I am not trying to ask you to do anything unethical. Although civil disobedience is at times necessary....e.g. in the case of standing up against the new law SB 150 that abuses transgendered youth! Anyway - I understand your position. When you are comfortable, please write the letter - and yes there is a sense of urgency because once certain changes take place they are not undo-able. I know you understand that too.

I would not be doing my duty as a parent, nor being professional as a parent, if I were not staunchly advocating for the best interest of my child constantly and in a permanent way.

I have not read Civil Disobedience by Thoreau - maybe it is time for me to do so...have to be an audio book because I am having so much eye trouble...

More on autism -- if you look back through Jackie's records Autism was suggested many times -- and I feel strongly like it should have been diagnosed when Jackie was 3 or 4.

See records from Lara West in Corydon from previously sent files (I think I sent you a bunch of files for Jackie). See records from Dr. Stockhammer (StrongMinds) etc....those records, I thought, were also sent previously...lmk if you need them.

As one example, when Jackie was younger, Jackie WOULD NOT go to sleep or even lay down...unless all the stuffed animals were in a specific order in a specific way all around the bed in like a protective ring...and they had to be very specifically organized...

Jackie often spun around when younger, and would not stop spinning....or still at times runs up to random strangers at the store and starts talking to them or used to give random strangers hugs.

Even now, randomly says hi to people in inappropriate ways...e.g. taking a walk - shouting at people far down across the street saying HI!!!!!

Trust me when I say -- I want to make sure of Jackie's gender identity wants/needs/desires more than anyone else. I feel like there was one specific day when things flipped...part of me thinks that Jackie was brainwashed by emotional neglect and emotional abuse from her mother...her mother also has/had a count of physical abuse toward Jackie in the past when Jackie was 6 years old...when we temporarily lived in Colorado. I wrote to CPS to tell them I thought it was a one time thing, but I can tell you with certainty that a lot of emotional abuse has taken place (Jackie's mom to Jackie) ... one example is when she told Jackie that Jackie was the 'shittiest excuse of a child'. My heart BROKE when I heard about that.

Jackie was in fifth grade...and Jackie had started being home schooled - so after 2/22/2022...and Jackie was at my house during mom's weeks while mom worked...Jackie resents me for homeschooling even though it is what Jackie said she needed -- but the resentment comes from her doing homeschool at my house during mom's weeks - which was mom's decision....so I am the innocent bystander getting gunned down...

Anyway - Jackie had been feeling really really hurt by things that had been happening between her mother and her, and I said I will talk to mommy with you when she comes if you want me to...and Jackie poured out her heart (still Jack back then)...

I sat in the car and listened to Jack to mommy how (he) felt -- for about 10 minutes of gut-wrenching, soul-scorching, extremely raw SAD emotion, finalizing with Jack saying mommy - you've hurt me so much I just don't think you love me anymore... Jack(ie) did a great job voicing her emotions...but mommy said 'I am not going to sit here and listen to this...I just want to go home...we are leaving'. That was her response (when she was picking up Jackie from my house after she got off work on a homeschool day during her week). I asked Jack(ie) if they ever talked anymore, and she said no...

I cannot get mommy to do things that will help Jackie...like I have been trying to get her to send Kosair her pay stubs from U of L because they need those to finalize a hearing aid application for Jackie, or fill out SSI functional form from the other parent side, etc... I cannot make her do things that she NEEDS to do to help Jackie.

After that day when Jackie spilled out her emotions to mommy in the car, it was like a light switch flipped, and Jackie suddenly began only identifying with mommy...so I do definitely have concerns that emotional abuse has played a role in this gender transformation ideology that Jackie has now...

I don't know how to sort that out as I am not an expert on psyche' or ego or id or any of those things.....all I can tell you is that suddenly Jackie's perception and reality shifted very dynamically - that was also the time period when Jackie was having a lot of hallucinations, and paranoia, and when more of that began...so I feel like it must play some kind of a role. To help better the understanding of the specifics I am talking about, I have included an article and a link...mommy also talks negatively of me constantly to Jackie...I try not to say anything one way or the other about mommy to Jackie...I honestly don't know what to say or do if that comes up...so I tend to acknowledge Jackie's statement whatever it is, and then steer the subject elsewhere.

After that one day, Jackie started to 'hate' me and tell me mean things, and be extremely nice to mommy, and prefer to be at mommy's house. I can tell you also that mommy only really paid close attention to Jackie when she started painting her fingernails or things like that. Mommy always wanted a girl.

I just want Jackie to be who Jackie truly is. Herself. Whether he identifies as he/him, they/them, she/her, I don't care - as long as Jackie is true to her heart and her soul and who she is at a core and fundamental level.

Parental Alienation is what I am thinking could be going on - I could not think of it until I looked it up again...but mommy takes Jackie to do all these fun things and out to eat on a lot of days, and as an example, she would not sign a document for 6 months that would have allowed me to get 450 per month KTAP so I lost out on $2400+ dollars because she would not sign a document, it took well over 6 months to get a passport because she kept not signing a form that was required for Jackie to get her passport renewed and things like that...mommy controls how Jackie has fun basically is what I am saying...and at my house...I have no money...so am very limited about what I am able to do for Jackie...with that...and her talking badly to Jackie about me all the time, I feel that I am being emotionally alienated in terms of how Jackie views me, and I wonder if that plays a role in the gender thing.

If you need anything else, please let me know. Charlie introduced himself as Charlie Sawyer to me, so I am going to refer to him as Charlie....around Jackie I will call him Mr. Charlie because that is what he told Jackie to call him. Do you want me to call you Ms. Darcie around Jackie? Please let me know.

Thanks Darcie for looking out for the well-being of my child psychologically.

I can appreciate the desire for urgency in the letter but I would not be doing my due diligence (nor would they accept a letter from me) if I wrote it after one session of intake. Part of the letter specifies the length of time I have seen a child and one session won't really be enough for us to make a determination. Even the Social Worker at the Page clinic often wants to meet with an individual at least 3-4 times before they sign off on scheduling with the Endocrinologist. They used to have a Social Worker on staff down there specifically to meet with kids and make those determinations which is often who you would meet with first but I suspect with HB 150 in place they have changed that policy or they have lost that position - either way I promise we will be working towards it and I will write it when I am ready and feel like it's appropriate to do so. I do understand that those changes are hard to watch happen but it's imperative that I, as the professional you are asking to write the letter, do my best to meet the ethical guidelines of practice set forth by my license. So I need to meet with Jackie a few times before we get to that point.

Hi Darcie.

Happy Labor Day Weekend. I hope that you are doing okay.

I met with Charlie Sawyer at The Phoenix earlier this week. Prior to going in to meet with him, I had told Jackie that we would be meeting with him - I mentioned it multiple times the night before, and even a few times in the morning on the way to school.

I got to the meeting at around 2:05 (it started at 2:00) so I was five minutes late - but the first 45 minutes or so was just me and Charlie filling out paperwork anyway...

Around 2:45 / 2:50, we went to grab Jaqquelyn from class, and Jackie was definitely not happy about it.

Charlie witnessed Jackie's anger directed toward me, including Jackie hitting me, throwing her purse at me, and slamming a chair into me...all because she didn't want to go to the meeting. She told Charlie she didn't want to go to therapy in school. He said he could not force her to go to therapy at school. Jackie said she didn't trust talking to men as much as talking to women (something I don't understand really - will say why in a minute)...but I get it somewhat...because I am more comfortable talking to women therapists myself...

Anyway - Mr. Charlie (as he has students call him) suggested to Jackie that Jackie talk to you, at your upcoming meeting with Jackie on next Thursday at 4pm, and he said to Jackie that he hopes she considers 'your' opinion after talking to you, as Jackie mentioned she trusted you, but not Mr. Charlie.

So Charlie said he was going to talk to you prior to that upcoming meeting with Jackie on Thursday.

I can tell you Jackie has a ton of anger directed toward me. A lot of it comes from me being the one that pretty much always had to take Jackie to the doctor because mom didn't want to do so... Same thing with dealing with school situations with the bullying and everything....mom didn't want to deal with any of it, so I had to do so. If it is helpful, I can print out the complaints I had to submit to the superintendent's office at Bloom.

I have trouble getting mom to do anything for Jackie honestly....I just filled out another massive packet for hearing aids for Jackie (for auditory processing disorder)....all mom had to do was send in her pay stubs and her employer information to Kosair - but I can't get her to do it. When I renewed Jackie's passport - it took her almost a year to do her part so we could actually apply. My parents took us to Phoenix over the Summer and we had considered going to Mexico, but since Lindsay (Jackie's mom) wouldn't fill out the paperwork in any kind of timeframe that was reasonable - we didn't even have the passport, so that was not an option...

Mommy doesn't normally go to therapy appointments either... mommy wasn't involved in getting Jackie into The Phoenix...or into Bloom...you get the point...Jackie resents me for taking care of her....(of Jackie)....so I don't know how to handle that... Jackie also resents me because mom forced her to stay with me from 7:30 am to 5:30 pm on mommy's weeks. I know that mommy talks badly about me in front of Jackie (according to Jackie), and I try not to say anything bad about mommy in front of Jackie (or at all really). I know she struggles with mental health issues. I struggle with physical and mental health issues...myself...

Anyway - Jackie has a lot of hatred directed toward me....and it is really hurtful....something that really sucks...is that I often have felt the need to cry...but Sjogren's Disease has stolen from me, the ability to make tears, and have that release....and Jackie will say things like....well it is obvious you aren't upset....you aren't even crying....or other things like that....

Just trying to give you more of a background.

Switching gears... is there a way that you can write a letter to allow us to establish care with the PAGE Clinic? I don't know if it will even do any good at this point as SB 150 may restrict what they are able to do... Jackie's voice is beginning to crack and change and I have tried so hard to get puberty blockers in place before that happens to avoid the potential for vocal chord surgery (which is risky) later....I am not really comfortable with everything - but trying to do what is right for my child...

Yes that is Lindsay's week (she spells her name with an 'a') so please make sure you spell it like Lindsay. I know Lindsey Smith's name used an 'e'.

If you talk to Lindsey Smith tell her we said hi.

Seems like Jackie got less shy after I left the room. There are some things I don't understand. I am Jaqquelyn's biggest advocate

I see the portal "Join Now" link now...

We live in my parents' home in the basement.

Right now my parents are not home - they went on a spur of the moment trip. So the 11:30 time would be ideal as I have no idea what time they will be back, but they do not honor any boundaries here - (e.g. they would walk right into the middle of a therapy session and not think twice about it...)...

I want Jackie to be able to talk freely. Can we split the difference and meet at 12:00? I also have to make lunch and we need to look for housing, and Jackie has some homework to do.

Hi Darcie.

I know you are getting ready to be out of pocket for a while, but I thought maybe it would be helpful to talk about Jackie's case prior to her first session with you to help give you background information etc... if it would be helpful, I can also send you her neuropsychiatric evaluation, and her meds list and her conditions list etc... and some older psychological testing etc... too. Would any of this be helpful? Jaqquelyn is 12 and puberty has started and I am trying my hardest to help her at least get on a puberty blocker or something so she has the best chance to be the most feminine she can in life with the least amount of medical interventions necessary...you know? She is my only child...I love her with all of my heart...I only want the best for her...

Darcie,

Something happened and my keyboard stopped working when I was trying to fill out the emergency contact form section.

It listed my mom's bday (Jackie's Nana) as 3/7/2018...her bday is 3/7/1952...Nana is not 7 years younger than Jackie lol.

I can fix it if given the opportunity but the form disappeared... or I've provided the emergency contact information below.

Hi Darcie.

If this coming Sunday at 8 am is still okay, I had already asked my ex-wife if she could make sure Jackie was awake at her house, and she had already agreed.

If that will not work (based on your schedule it sounds like it may not be the best time), I can let her know. If we need to do the 27th at 11:30 am, I can make that happen (if that needs to be the first appointment). Please let me know.

==========

Regarding the Therapy Portal emails - I received 2 of them - I will work on getting the information in there to you asap.

==========

Regarding Lindsey Smith, yes Jackie was heartbroken when she left, but she was not at liberty to tell us where she went and I could not find her anywhere online, so we had tried to see someone at 7 Counties named Beatrice, but Beatrice was uncomfortable talking to Jackie, and ultimately said we could not see her... anyway - I'd be glad to sign the letter of release of information for you to be able to talk to Lindsey Smith. She helped Jackie through some very tough times.

==========

The === divisions above help me with being able to read text -- I have some major eye issues going on -- hopefully they are not too bothersome to you.

I'll get the other info to you hopefully sometime today.

difficulties) that it poses for our transgender youth and their rights. I knew the PAGE clinic required letters prior to starting any sort of HRT or puberty blockers but I'm guessing they have had to get stricter in their policies since HB 150 and all it's things were passed. I know there is still hope that they will overturn it but for now we live with where we are and support kids how we can. I am so grateful Jackie has you to be supportive of her! Parental support is so key (even when there are other family members who are not).

I completely get the morning difficulty. Why don't we try instead to meet on Sunday, August 27th. Normally I have a little more availability but I am going to be out of town from the evening of the 20th thru the 26th so that's putting a little kink in my scheduling. I could do 11:30am that day (the 27th) and likely that is your weekend and a little later in the day for Jackie to not get up so early. Does that sound OK? That's actually better for me too as the 8am would have been pushing it all the way around.

Also, I realized when you gave me your child's given name that I know your child from my role as a Supervisor with Seven Counties Services. I used to Supervise Lindsey Smith and I believe that is who Jackie saw when she was going there, is that correct? If so, and with your permission, I could also consult with Lindsey regarding the letter which might help us be able to write it faster since she would have the history longer than even me.

I will get the paperwork and documentation sent to you this evening. It will come from Creating Connection via Therapy Notes. I will also include a Release of Information for Seven Counties if you want me to be able to include some information from previous therapy services there so we can get moving faster. Looking forward to working with Jackie and with your family.

Jackie is 12 and beginning puberty so there is an urgency to the matter that I have tried my best to attend to, but we've had trouble finding someone for Jackie.

Please see the attached letter from the PAGE Clinic (in terms of requirement). Jackie has done the best with art therapy out of the several modes of therapy we've tried/experienced over the years.

Please contact me to let me know a good time that Jackie could get scheduled to see you (and if you do telehealth) - and also if you accept KY Humana Medicaid MCO (Healthy Horizons) insurance.

I prefer email, due vastly to the sheer amount of doctor appointments that I have -- so I often cannot answer the phone. However, if you should prefer to reach me by phone, my number is 502.956.0052. Texting me is okay also. I am looking for an appointment for right after school pretty much (or maybe a little later) - I just know it is easier for Jackie to be at home once at home....that is true for all of us isn't it?

I accept Humana Medicaid and would be happy to do telehealth if that is what Jackie prefers although I do often tell kids if they want to do a hybrid or ever want to come into the office they absolutely can.

My after schools are very busy as you can imagine but I will make every effort to get her in for those times that work! For a first meeting/intake could we do next Sunday the 20th at 8am? I know that is really early BUT my after school appts are full this coming week and I am out of town the week after so I would love to get a start sooner rather than later.

If that works please let me know Jackie's DOB and I will send you an email to get a portal account started from Therapy Notes which is our electronic records platform. I look forward to meeting you and Jackie.

As mentioned, Jackie has not been able to even go to the PAGE clinic yet because they require a letter to be written by an outside agency/therapist/etc... that is gender affirming. They are the ones requesting the letter. Jackie has a referral to them already from her PCP, but they won't allow us to even schedule an initial appointment until after we have the letter that I sent the template for...

> I do think they have a therapist who writes these types of letters but I am also happy to assess and write one as well! I too find that I dislike that a kid has to have a gender dysphoria diagnosis to receive affirming care and wish it was not so but I do get that this is the world we currently live in.

SB 150 basically bans care for transgender people and takes away their rights. It is very hard in our current living situation because my father (born in 1944) is very supportive of taking away rights for transgender people, and refuses to use Jackie's preferred pronouns, so Jackie has to have 2 identities while I am stuck living in the basement of my parents home with Jackie. I am working on a solution. I have been able, finally, to secure a Mainstream Voucher which will allow us to get an apartment, and possibly even a house with a housing program I learned about early last week - but I am still finding out the details. The voucher also had to be revised, and I am expecting to get the revised voucher on Monday, so I will know the voucher amount. The housing program is nice if I am eligible, because the voucher covers principal, interest, taxes, and insurance on a house. That would be ideal as I have a systemic progressive disease and am unable to work - but not able to collect disability (keep getting denied)...even with over 6,000 pages of medical records...

The Jefferson County Board of Education adopted a policy declaring that gender 'dysphoria' can be considered a 'disability', so protections could be added to 504 plans and IEPs for students that identify as a different gender and to allow for the use of preferred pronouns and to address the bathroom situation.

> I accept Humana Medicaid and would be happy to do telehealth if that is what Jackie prefers although I do often tell kids if they want to do a hybrid or ever want to come into the office they absolutely can.

A hybrid would be best. For one thing, I never know how Jackie's mother will react. She was quite upset about having to take Jackie to any appointment for anything in the past. I have taken Jackie to the vast majority of all appointments in her life. Lindsay (my ex-wife), did, however, begin to take Jackie to art therapy on her weeks (we have split custody and switch on Fridays). On my weeks, if the schedule allows, in general, I'm happy to bring Jackie as I think in person is better for her…that being said…I have no income…and very, very, very limited resources in terms of having gas to drive anywhere.

My after schools are very busy as you can imagine but I will make every effort to get her in for those times that work! For a first meeting/intake could we do next Sunday the 20th at 8am? I know that is really early BUT my after school appts are full this coming week and I am out of town the week after so I would love to get a start sooner rather than later.

That will be Lindsay's week, so I will need to ask her…but I will see what she says. Would you be able to do the meeting any later? Lindsay has trouble getting up in the morning on the weekends, and will want to rest I am sure. Jackie would do better a little later than that too (generally meds are taken around then -- including Adderall for ADHD etc…)…and they will not have kicked in yet…if that is the only time you have though…

If that works please let me know Jackie's DOB and I will send you an email to get a portal account started from Therapy Notes which is our electronic records platform. I look forward to meeting you and Jackie.

Can we go on and get the portal thing started at least? Then we are at least making some kind of progress, and I can get you whatever records you may need, etc… Jackie's DOB is 4-26-2011…but legal documents still all list Jackie as Jack Fouts (including insurance card).

Hi Darcie.

Theresa provided your information to me as someone that could see my child Jackie (Jackie was born male but identifies female - and uses she/her pronouns).

I've been trying for several months to get a letter (required by the PAGE Clinic at Norton) for Jackie to be able to begin to receive 'gender dysphoria' related services there. I don't like the word dysphoria as it implies there is something wrong or negative...that is why I put it in quotes.

I have attached the letter requirements from the PAGE Clinic so you can see if you think this is something you will be able to help with once Jackie has seen you for a little while.

Jackie is 12 and beginning puberty so there is an urgency to the matter that I have tried my best to attend to, but we've had trouble finding someone for Jackie.

Please see the attached letter from the PAGE Clinic (in terms of requirement). Jackie has done the best with art therapy out of the several modes of therapy we've tried/experienced over the years.

Please contact me to let me know a good time that Jackie could get scheduled to see you (and if you do telehealth) - and also if you accept KY Humana Medicaid MCO (Healthy Horizons) insurance.

I prefer email, due vastly to the sheer amount of doctor appointments that I have -- so I often cannot answer the phone. However, if you should prefer to reach me by phone, my number is 502.956.0052. Texting me is okay also. I am looking for an appointment for right after school pretty much (or maybe a little later) - I just know it is easier for Jackie to be at home once at home....that is true for all of us isn't it?

Please see responses below in red (I have eye trouble - so the contrasting colors are very helpful to me.)

Thank you for writing back to me - I have had a very hard time finding someone.

As mentioned, Jackie has not been able to even go to the PAGE clinic yet because they require a letter to be written by an outside agency/therapist/etc... that is gender affirming. They are the ones requesting the letter. Jackie has a referral to them already from her PCP, but they won't allow us to even schedule an initial appointment until after we have the letter that I sent the template for...

> I do think they have a therapist who writes these types of letters but I am also happy to assess and write one as well! I enjoy working with kids and especially helping them grow more into who they are! I too find that I dislike that a kid has to have a gender dysphoria diagnosis to receive affirming care and wish it was not so but I do get that this is the world we currently live in.

SB 150 basically bans care for transgender people and takes away their rights. It is very hard in our current living situation because my father (born in 1944) is very supportive of taking away rights for transgender people, and refuses to use Jackie's preferred pronouns, so Jackie has to have 2 identities while I am stuck living in the basement of my parents home with Jackie. I am working on a solution. I have been able, finally, to secure a Mainstream Voucher which will allow us to get an apartment, and possibly even a house with a housing program I learned about early last week - but I am still finding out the details. The voucher also had to be revised, and I am expecting to get the revised voucher on Monday, so I will know the voucher amount. The housing program is nice if I am eligible, because the voucher covers principal, interest, taxes, and insurance on a house. That would be ideal as I have a systemic progressive disease and am unable to work - but not able to collect disability (keep getting denied)...even with over 6,000 pages of medical records...

The Jefferson County Board of Education adopted a policy declaring that gender 'dysphoria' can be considered a 'disability', so protections could be added to 504 plans and IEPs for students that identify as a different gender and to allow for the use of preferred pronouns and to address the bathroom situation.

> I accept Humana Medicaid and would be happy to do telehealth if that is what Jackie prefers although I do often tell kids if they want to do a hybrid or ever want to come into the office they absolutely can.

A hybrid would be best. For one thing, I never know how Jackie's mother will react. She was quite upset about having to take Jackie to any appointment for anything in the past. I have taken Jackie to the vast majority of all appointments in her life. Lindsay (my ex-wife), did, however, begin to take Jackie to art therapy on her weeks (we have split custody and switch on Fridays). On my weeks, if the schedule allows, in general, I'm happy to bring Jackie as I think in person is better for her…that being said…I have no income…and very, very, very limited resources in terms of having gas to drive anywhere.

My after schools are very busy as you can imagine but I will make every effort to get her in for those times that work! For a first meeting/intake could we do next Sunday the 20th at 8am? I know that is really early BUT my after school appts are full this coming week and I am out of town the week after so I would love to get a start sooner rather than later.

That will be Lindsay's week, so I will need to ask her…but I will see what she says. Would you be able to do the meeting any later? Lindsay has trouble getting up in the morning on the weekends, and will want to rest I am sure. Jackie would do better a little later than that too (generally meds are taken around then -- including Adderall for ADHD etc…)…and they will not have kicked in yet…if that is the only time you have though…

If that works please let me know Jackie's DOB and I will send you an email to get a portal account started from Therapy Notes which is our electronic records platform. I look forward to meeting you and Jackie.

Can we go on and get the portal thing started at least? Then we are at least making some kind of progress, and I can get you whatever records you may need, etc… Jackie's DOB is 4-26-2011…but legal documents still all list Jackie as Jack Fouts (including insurance card).

Have your mental health professional do an official gender dysphoria evaluation and suggest whether or not Jackie is ready for cross-sex steroids.

The recommended content of the referral letter for feminizing/masculinizing hormone therapy is as follows:
1. The clients general identifying characteristics;
2. Results of the clients psychosocial assessment, including any diagnoses;
3. The duration of the referring health professionals relationship with the client, including the type of evaluation and therapy or counseling to date;
4. An explanation that the criteria for hormone therapy have been met, and a brief description of the clinical rationale for supporting the clients request for hormone therapy;
5. A statement that informed consent has been obtained from the patient;
6. A statement that the referring health professional is available for coordination of care and welcomes a phone call to establish this.

Have them email that directly to Dr. Leo at DrLeo@queermed.com

Thanks! Yes I will send her a message as well. I might even be able to swing 2:30pm I'll ask her what she prefers.
I'll send out another possible call for family also just in case.

Sorry for the delay. I will happily talk to Jackie about this next week but I suspect the bacterial infection that has caused the coughing is unrelated to the hygiene issue. Almost every kid I see has had some sort of respiratory/sinus combo since school returned to sessions. However, the hygiene thing (while super annoying) is also very much ASD for her age. Yet maybe setting a schedule or some sort of routine will help. I'll talk to her on Monday. Thanks for letting me know.

John,

Thank you for letting me know the status of the family therapy. I will say that the tone of your email may be off putting for Life in Motion. It sounds to me like they are waiting to find you a spot and to make sure that the insurance issues is not going to be a problem. The last thing you want is for them to start scheduling appointments and then realize the insurance will not pay and you end up with a large bill. Sometimes it takes time to check into these things and the insurance game is not fast. I know you are anxious for Jackie to start family therapy and that with that sometimes it is very frustrating to have to wait but that does not mean they do not want to help Jackie or you, it just may mean it takes longer than you would like to get started.

Also, next Monday I need to push Jackie's session to 6:30 instead of 5:30 like we usually meet. Same day just an hour later as I have a meeting conflict. I look forward to continuing to see her then and the every Monday schedule seems to be going well.

Tayler,

Please can you let me know where you stand with this? It is really important to us that Jackie be able to talk in therapy about certain things....I also wanted to ask you if you did EMDR therapy or EMDR2 therapy or ACT therapy or what modalities you all use at your location. Jackie has good talk individual therapy through Darcie Taggart, but I believe another approach simultaneously in addition to the family therapy, could be really beneficial.

Jackie meets with her therapist tonight, and I would really like to be able to at least tell her something....can you please give me a status update from your end?

Okay no problem. Thanks for reaching out - yes I understand about the insurance and billing situation and that is yet another reason why I, too, was confused about whether service would be covered or not.

I have 'Traditional KY Medicaid' with no MCO....that is because I am on the Home and Community Based Services Medicaid Waiver program.

Here is Jackie's card (which says Jack because her legal name is not yet changed to Jaqquelyn - so on insurance documents still Jack A. Fouts....Jackie's chosen name is Jaqquelyn A. Fouts with the nickname Jackie. Jackie uses she/her pronouns).

Telehealth is what we would like to have set up - or after an initial visit or whatever your rule may be.

I, of course, do not have any knowledge of what my ex-wife's insurance is...

You can reach my ex-wife by calling her at (502) 475-6896, but she prefers email so lindsayfoutscpa@gmail.com.

Thank you Tayler.

Jackie has good talk individual therapy through Darcie Taggart, but I believe another approach simultaneously in addition to the family therapy, could be really beneficial.

Okay no problem. Thanks for reaching out - yes I understand about the insurance and billing situation and that is yet another reason why I, too, was confused about whether service would be covered or not.

I have 'Traditional KY Medicaid' with no MCO....that is because I am on the Home and Community Based Services Medicaid Waiver program.

Here is Jackie's card (which says Jack because her legal name is not yet changed to Jaqquelyn - so on insurance documents still Jack A. Fouts....Jackie's chosen name is Jaqquelyn A. Fouts with the nickname Jackie. Jackie uses she/her pronouns).

Telehealth is what we would like to have set up - or after an initial visit or whatever your rule may be.

I, of course, do not have any knowledge of what my ex-wife's insurance is...

You can reach my ex-wife by calling her at (502) 475-6896, but she prefers email so lindsayfoutscpa@gmail.com.

Thank you Tayler.

Before I can move forward with anything, I have to speak with the billing department about how this would be billed. You can respond to this email with that information and once I have spoken with the billing team I will reach back out to you with an update. Thank you.

Apologies for a delayed response. As I'm sure you're aware it is always very busy before school returns. I am completely booked the next week and a half until school starts. If I get a cancellation I will be sure to let you and Jackie know. Ideally I would love to be able to offer twice weekly appts for folks but often that is just not an option. Again if a cancellation comes up I will reach out!

Hey John,

I asked Jackie tonight if we could do next Monday at 5:30 again instead of Wednesday as I have a Wednesday conflict. I'm actually wondering if it would be possible to just do every Monday at 5:30pm instead of switching back and forth between Mondays and Wednesdays to provide consistency for Jackie. I am hoping since your new place is so much closer to her school that this year it will cut down on the travel time Monday evening AND maybe give you a break that night since I know Monday is your infusion day. I have that 5:30pm time open weekly so we could just keep it that way if it works for you.

Also wanted to check in on if you had any success in reaching out to the family therapist I sent over. Let me know what you found out.

Thanks.

I spoke with Cheryl Gilbert at Life in Motion Counseling and they accept Humana Medicaid and can do family therapy work via telehealth. I would recommend reaching out there regarding doing some family sessions: https://www.lifeinmotionkentucky.com/

Regarding Eating related issues while I definitely address this it's not something that Jackie identifies to me as a major issue for her, that does NOT mean it's not something to focus on and definitely I would want to include a medical professional. My first recommendation is always talking to her primary care or pediatrician so they can monitor it and look at weight and age appropriate norms. They will note if anything is majorly out of the ordinary regarding weight loss or loss of growth patterns. I think in regards to thinking she is fat sadly she is in really good company with other girls her age, it's something I hear from girls all the time. BUT because it truly can be an issue that's why I say it's good to get a medical professional onboard to truly monitor weight and growth.

IF the pediatrician feels that she is losing weight/growth I think that this place is usually the first place i recommend folks call: https://www.louisvillecenterforeatingdisorders.com/

I do not know if the Louisville Center for Eating Disorders accepts insurance but it would be good to check!

Subject: Re: Were you able to talk with Jackie about her suicidal ideation and other more deep things?

Hi John, I appreciate the information and follow up. These are the three treatment objectives I have been working with Jackie on based on the information we previously had discussed. I do actually check in with Jackie weekly on suicidal thoughts and ideations and while she has discussed sometimes having thoughts she had never divulged a plan to me which is where we continue to work. She can identify that being hungry or tired increases these. I will continue to assess risk as every session as I do with all my kids - and when it's brought up to me that she's mentioned something at another appt I follow up on that as well.

Objectives for treatment -

1. Jackie will learn and practice at least two more effective ways to express feelings in adaptive ways without screaming, hitting, or kicking and will learn to accept limits and situations she can not control from 2 out of 5 times to 4 out of 5 times

2. Jackie will continue to explore gender and self-expression and will be able to identify three positive characteristics of self during session, Jackie and her family will identify needs for gender affirming care and schedule relevant MD appts with support.

3 - Jackie will reduce incidents of SI from reports of several times per week to once a week per less and will maintain zero plans for suicide. Jackie will review these thoughts/behaviors in session weekly with therapist.

I am always happy to set up a parent session to discuss options. I am also continuing to look for someone that takes Jackie's insurance that might be able to do family sessions via telehealth - I am hoping to have a list for you soon. I'm glad that UK made a referral for testing, I have made one to Seven Counties as well and hopefully one of those options will be able to do the testing soon. I have not seen as much evidence of the dissociation in sessions particularly but I never feel like it's a bad thing to follow up on especially if you are seeing concerning things at home.

I will say there are large developmental shifts that occur between the ages of 9 and 13 and when you combine that with COVID (which has increased lots of kids mental health related concerns) I think that at least has something to do with what you are experiencing. Long COVID and also the isolation that COVID in general caused coupled with the typical developmental shifts that kids experience headed into the teenage years are really rough. AND when you add her autism to that I think lots of the attitude shift you are seeing is related to that. However, it's still understandable that you would like for her to help around the house so we can add task completion and helping with chores to the objectives we are working on for sure.

Regarding parenting sessions here is what I have this week:

Tuesday between 8 and 9am

Wednesday between 8:30 and 9:30am

Friday between 12 and 1pm

Would either of those work for you?

I am in need of her to help do some basic things. If I ask though, it usually results in her shouting at my face and screaming she hates me, and her slamming the door in my face, or similar things -- part of it is normal teenage behavior - and part of it seems to be extreme way above and beyond that. I have been stuck at this point with her for maybe 2 years or something - possibly 3. It makes me very sad because Jackie used to not treat me in those ways -- used to act much more appropriately -- and I don't know what caused the change. I think the mental status change may be COVID related.

I can do 2:30 tomorrow as I have had a cancellation during that time. I would recommend we pull in a second therapist for family therapy to protect Jackie's individual therapy time and her relationship with me. I can offer some recommendations if you need them. Would it be best if it's telehealth or would you be able to make it in person for family?

Let me know and I can offer some recommendations for additional services.

I'm sorry that the Tuesday time won't work that you had suggested but I have a pretty important abdominal ultrasound in Lexington tomorrow and I'm not wanting Jackie to have to have therapy in my presence - I don't think it would be productive as we would likely all be uncomfortable in one way or another. I don't want to be in the way of Jackie's therapy is what I am saying....

also -- I spoke with Jackie's PCP about possible eating disorder that me and Jackie's mom are both observing....he suggested family therapy. I advised him that I have talked to Lindsay in the past a number of times, but she would not go to family therapy in the past. Dr. Pendleton (Jackie's PCP) said he thought that family therapy might be the best fit. I gave him Lindsay's contact information to make sure he had it, and he said he was going to try to reach out to her too.... could me and you and Jackie and possibly Lindsay all have a session together specifically to talk about a few things.....? Eating disorder...video gaming addiction basically...and emotional lability caused by tiredness from so much screen time and other? Might need more than 1 session for that....and it might be better to have a different therapist for the family sessions -- again -- to protect Jackie's therapy-space... What are your thoughts?

Please let me know.

Yep, I left Megan a voicemail tonight letting her know Jackie was in regular weekly treatment with me and that she could call me with any other questions. Hopefully that clears it out. 😀

Also, I am a licensed art therapist and a play therapist so I am happy to do more art with Jackie and if she wants to come in person happy to have her do so. Our practice is in the same building Theresa was in but they aren't there anymore, just my group practice there now. We also have two other Art therapists on staff if Jackie wanted to see someone else in addition to me and keep ours as they are. Happy to set that up if you like.

Hey John,

I told Jackie this tonight but I wanted you to know as well, we moved next Monday's appt to 4:30pm instead of 5:30pm.

The following week I will be on vacation and will not be available for our appt on 6/19.

I do not return to the office until Tuesday, June 25th so I will also miss our appt on Monday 6/24 BUT I would like to reschedule that week. Preferably Tuesday the 25th in the morning at like 11:30am.

We will then resume our "normal" schedule on Wednesday, July 3rd at 6:30pm.

Hey John,

I did see Jackie as scheduled on Monday this week. I have her scheduled this coming Wednesday at our regular 6:30pm time and again on Wednesday the 5th of June at 6:30pm. I am off for Memorial Day which is her next Monday appt and will work to get that rescheduled another time that week.

I do have a vacation coming up June 12th-25th and will miss her appts on 6/19 and 6/24 but will likely still be able to see her the week of the 24th as I return to the office on the 26th. So hoping we will only miss one week of our sessions for that.

The Acute Child Crisis Services at Seven Counties have a 24 hour Crisis number that can be accessed in emergencies while I am out (or anytime really) and they do telehealth if it's needed as well so you would not need to bring her in necessarily to access those services. 502-589-8070

Subject: My recommendations

My recommendation for testing or a full psych assessment would be Seven Counties. There will probably be a 6-8 month wait for testing but they accept Medicaid so there shouldn't be a fee which I think is good and I know their whole team and think they do a good job. I can help make that referral as long as you are OK with that, they will need to do at least SOME in person appts to do the assessment but we can cross that bridge when we come to it. I will send a release in the portal if that's acceptable and can refer. Psych testing can look at depersonalization and derealization as well as dissociation that might be occurring. Without additional assessment it's hard to completely diagnose those things. I think a lot of kids experience those things even without it being a full DID type of diagnosis. I will also say that I don't feel like I see those things as much as you do but I'm not with her as much as you are. I also think sometimes kids don't want to or block out things they feel disconnected from or embarrassed about and when asked directly they will say "nope, didn't happen" because their perception of what happened is different.

I would also recommend we attempt to find a Psychiatrist that will take a look at all of the meds Jackie takes unless the new PCP is comfortable. There are LOTS of meds that can cause both rage and agitation and as you move towards adding puberty blockers it's important to look at the whole med cocktail. In fact sometimes our ADHD meds can start to cause agitation if what's really going on is mood disorder related and typically if that's going to happen it will start when a kid begins to move towards puberty so that's a good thing to explore. Can't hurt to explore alternatives or other options but as I am not an MD I don't know exactly what that should be.

Hope that's helpful information.

I will also say that I don't feel like I see those things as much as you do but I'm not with her as much as you are. I also think sometimes kids don't want to or block out things they feel disconnected from or embarrassed about and when asked directly they will say "nope, didn't happen" because their perception of what happened is different.

I would also recommend we attempt to find a Psychiatrist that will take a look at all of the meds Jackie takes unless the new PCP is comfortable. There are LOTS of meds that can cause both rage and agitation and as you move towards adding puberty blockers it's important to look at the whole med cocktail. In fact sometimes our ADHD meds can start to cause agitation if what's really going on is mood disorder related and typically if that's going to happen it will start when a kid begins to move towards puberty so that's a good thing to explore. Can't hurt to explore alternatives or other options but as I am not an MD I don't know exactly what that should be.

Hope that's helpful information.

I will work on a letter with Jackie's input at our next session based on the letter I wrote previously. That can either be next Monday at 5:30 when we are currently scheduled or if she can get on Friday evening around 5:30pm we can work on it then.

Hey John,

I will happily talk with Jackie but I am not around tonight. I am out of town and I think I told Jackie but I may have forgotten. I could see Jackie later on this week like Friday is she likes.

My recommendation when Jackie makes suicidal statements would be to call the crisis line at 589-8070 and ask about assessment or discuss the difficulties in the moment. You can honestly call them just when you are struggling in a parenting moment as I am not necessarily on call for crisis management usually outside of my regular hours. However the crisis line is always available 24/7 to use by parents when they can't reach me - or really outside of regular appts.

I will say I have not seen anything from Jackie that leads me to believe she is truly going to hurt herself - I think she says it in the moment to try to get a rise BUT I still think it's worth assessing.

If she would like to meet Friday after school I can do so then as I'll be back to work tomorrow.

I need some backup Darcie.....I need you to talk tonight with her.

Jackie just came to me and told me that instead of arguing back to ,me, she is going to just 'listen to a bunch of things that I say that are untrue and then hurt herself later'.....I told her it is not okay for her to say she wants to hurt herself or die because I won't let her treat me badly.

I really desperately need some help here.

Hey John,

Ok rounding back on email today. I actually think it might be a good idea for you and Jackie to see a family therapist that is JUST working on the family piece different that me working with Jackie on the peer/anxiety/gender/school related piece. I often find that having one person working on family and one person working on individual is more successful because your kid gets to keep someone that's "their person" to talk about all sorts of things and then you have a separate person who is helping with the family interaction and dynamics.

I have put out a call today looking for someone who specializes in that family work piece and will hopefully get you some referrals. I am more than happy to meet with you on the parenting piece for collateral supports but at this point it seems like it might be helpful to do some of that work together - hence my attempt to find you someone.

I also absolutely always encourage people to actively use the crisis line. That's what it's there for, especially if a kid is feeling suicidal or making suicidal statements in the moment. I can address that with Jackie next week for sure about the reasons we don't make those statements to just get out of an argument or to derail conversations but if you feel she's unsafe in the moment I would call crisis.

What I do notice is a pattern that when the routine is off it escalates Jackie for sure. This makes sense given the ASD diagnosis as often kids with ASD are very attached to routines and get dysregulated when it switches. I realize this week with the school days off there wasn't a choice but I do suspect that was a little of the escalation you noticed this week.

I will get you a list of folks that do family work ASAP and that take your insurance. If you still want to schedule a parent collateral session please let me know.

Subject: Re: I need to get the school the letter for the 5th of February from last week (please)

I am attaching a photo of a school note for Jackie for 2/5 - sadly because our appt was after school that may or may not suffice for school but it's the best we can do I think at this point.

All of the points you are making are valid. AND sadly you cannot control what happens at Lindsey's house when you aren't there. School may, at some point, file educational neglect if they feel it's warranted and you keeping the documentation like you do will be helpful, it proves a pattern and that it's not happening as much on your end. As much as possible I think you just keep doing what you are doing on your weeks. The pattern that is being set is being seen by others and you can't really control that. Should it come down to something like educational neglect then CPS will work with Lindsey to navigate those things because it's not really your responsibility (even though you love Jackie) to navigate what happens at that home.

Regarding long term health, I will say, that Jackie is excited (or from my observation excited) regardless of what they are eating at home for dinner and yes, typically brought from somewhere fast food related. I don't know the specifications of what she is and is not supposed to eat so I'm unsure if what's being served is on that or not. It's very frustrating I know to not be able to navigate what happens at the other house and to feel like you are in it alone to provide more nutritious and specific food items. Jackie also can't make the food choices show up but it doesn't seem from my end like she's asking for them (but why would she kids like to eat out usually even when they feel icky afterwards).

Regarding tone - there is a possibility that Jackie doesn't have a good idea of her tone at times or of being rude. It's a pretty classic symptom of Autism that kids don't always get the impact their words or tone have on others. That is not to say it's to be excused but I do think that she likely comes by that naturally. Typically what I tell parents to do in those situations is not to get into a struggle about whether or not it was rude but simply to say, "I can not hear you when you talk that way and I do not wish to respond. When you find another tone please come back and we can talk" and then walk away. While you can't make her or force her to react differently you can remove yourself (as much as possible) from the argument.

I do think that your move will be great for you both and am excited it's pending as I know you've worked on that for a long time. I also know it's closer to school so hopefully that will even out things at your house with less drive time and more flexibility as well as not having grandparents around all the time who are not supportive to Jackie or you.

Regarding doctors I might recommend you look at the Humana insurance site and look for LGBTQ+ supportive folks, I think there should be a way to search it? If not I also know Out Care is a place to find supportive MD's and other resources for families. Having a supportive doctor is really helpful for sure.

I'll check in with her tonight!

Darcie,

I need to have the written excuse note for the 5th when you saw Jackie when she was at her mom's please.

Also I told the school you could probably write a blanket letter for anxiety/depression, but I am not sure what you can or cannot say.

Also -- I talked to Jackie about how mommy won't take her to the doctor....her mom does not tell her very important messages and I cannot trust that Jackie will get them if I only send to Jackie's phone because Jackie is a child....an example would be last time Jackie was with mommy, I said I needed to know measurements for tucking underwear so I could get it ordered asap but no response from mommy....Jackie said mommy never even said anything at all to her about the message. Another example would be when it took mommy more than 5 months and 40 messages to sign a passport form required for Jackie to be able to get a passport.....it was getting utterly ridiculous...and frankly....many of these issues are.....

Mommy won't get healthier foods for Jackie either....per Jackie.....and Jackie said that might be what is making her feel sick....she also told the doctor at urgent care that...

Jackie said mommy usually gets fast food and won't get things from the grocery store that are healthier alternatives for her. Darcie - 4 doctors have stated very strongly that it is critically important for someone with Gastroparesis to not eat much processed food as it is very damaging to health....Jackie also has a gene mutation that affects the TACI protein (like me) but at least Jackie only has 1 bad copy.....still 1 copy has been shown to be a pathogenic variant...mommy is also aware of this but won't do the things to help Jackie have the best health....some of the things are FREE ... like daily exercise or going outside daily....

The teachers at school have noticed that Jackie is out mainly only on mommy's weeks too...and the math teacher stated how important it is for Jackie to not miss anymore.....

I CANNOT control what happens at Lindsay's house unless I initiate a legal battle for custody change which she would probably fight....just to be difficult....

The doctor said Jackie MUST be seen in her clinic each time that Jackie misses....but therein lies the problem also...mommy won't take her to doctors visits MOST of the time! I'd say 98 out of every 100 times I take Jackie to the doctor....

I have talked to Jackie some about this stating that Jackie herself pointed out that she feels more unwell after spending a week at mommy's house...I said it isn't mommy -- it is the way you feel when you are at mommy's house based on everything going on around you that could be impacting you....I don't want her to try to blame anyone for anything....blame and guilt never did nothing for no one....or whatever that saying is....

I told her you would talk to her some tomorrow about how she is feeling in these matters too....

Willa (Jackie's best friend for a couple of years from elementary school is dying too -- and Jackie knows)...

Also Darcie....Jackie has been incredibly mean to me very often this week (and many others really) and pretends to not know what rude and disrespectful mean.....today....she had an appointment at Braces, Braces, Braces that I told her about last night....and this morning....and when she got home from school we had to go.....it is within a 1/2 mile stretch of where we presently live....but she was very aggressively ragefully angry toward me and was nearly so upset she hit me (but didn't)....she was shaking with uncontrollable rage because I told her we had to go to the appointment....

...She also said she wanted to get hit by the door and die....started banging her head hard on the wall at the dental place....she also jumped out of the car before it had stopped (and had taken her seat belt off) when we got there and I told her it was not safe to do that....she said....smart-alec-like .... 'what???? I thought you said we were in a hurry.....' -- Darcie I am going to tell you again that I am not able to handle that type of attitude or behavior....much of it is very similar to how her mother acts or how my mother acts and that can totally put me out of service for a day or longer.....I have reached my limit of being the target of emotional abuse.....I cannot handle anymore....

There are many more examples, and I can provide video or audio if it would be helpful....I am not saying that I am not doing anything wrong. I am sure that plenty that I do is not the best as a parent, but it is the best I can do at any given time....I am sure I make a lot of mistakes....I try my best....

Jackie's doctor also keeps using he/him despite me asking 6 or 7 times at least for her to be respectful toward Jackie and use she/her pronouns....

I know we need a new pcp....any ideas of a good one locally? Dr. Langford dropped us on the only day I asked for help with food from the food pantry and now this doctor seems to be not very considerate, respectful, or understanding....definitely not of chronic illness.

There was a time period where mommy just didn't give Jackie any medicine even for a week -- or maybe just skipped Jackie's adderall and didn't fill it for a week or something....I saw my divorce attorney at that time because I was so frustrated with her....this is harmful to my child....I am seeing a great level of emotional harm seemingly now that is occurring when Jackie is with mommy....the divorce attorney said in his 30 years of practice he never (maybe very incredibly rarely) has seen a case where a child is better off after a legal custody battle. He said that usually only causes more trauma for the child (which is the last thing I want for Jackie...she has been through enough!).....I can tell you that my observation is that Jackie is not well each time she comes back from mommy's house (emotionally and even manifesting itself physically)....examples of this objectively can be seen by looking at attendance records this year....however....Jackie does have chronic illness issues which muddies the waters -- so that must be considered also...

I can also tell you that I think COVID did cause some kind of problem with regard to Central Nervous System changes in my observation of behaviors over time - but again there are a TON of variables at play there...

Want to point this out too quickly/briefly....Jackie, when exhibiting shaking anger and range toward me...when she lunges at me...because she has indeed hurt me physically before (some of that injury is unrecoverable)...I recently learned I have osteoporosis in my lumbar spine....I need to not fall or get hit or whatever because my bones are very fragile at this point and spinal fractures and/or hip fractures...not only would it be painful...but it would likely lower my overall lifespan...so it is very serious....unfortunately.....the mean mortality/prognosis for males under 50 diagnosed with osteoporosis under 50 is 18.x years....I want to live past 63 though! So I am trying to do all I can to do so...honestly though...I have had some very serious health scares...I don't know how to talk to Jackie about this without it scaring her...but at the same time...I often feel like she would not even care....it hurts me to think about that though....

On more positive notes!!!

Jackie has done a great job in helping packing her stuff for our move, and I have managed to get most of it to the new apartment!! - on a more positive note.

Jackie got straight As again in the last reporting period!!

Jackie continues to show a great interest in learning new things, and that eagerness for learning makes me very proud of Jackie.

I love Jackie always with all my heart -- that will never ever change.

Subject: Re: I need to get the school the letter for the 5th of February from last week (please)

I am attaching a photo of a school note for Jackie for 2/5 - sadly because our appt was after school that may or may not suffice for school but it's the best we can do I think at this point.

All of the points you are making are valid. AND sadly you cannot control what happens at Lindsey's house when you aren't there. School may, at some point, file educational neglect if they feel it's warranted and you keeping the documentation like you do will be helpful, it proves a pattern and that it's not happening as much on your end. As much as possible I think you just keep doing what you are doing on your weeks. The pattern that is being set is being seen by others and you can't really control that. Should it come down to something like educational neglect then CPS will work with Lindsey to navigate those things because it's not really your responsibility (even though you love Jackie) to navigate what happens at that home.

Regarding long term health, I will say, that Jackie is excited (or from my observation excited) regardless of what they are eating at home for dinner and yes, typically brought from somewhere fast food related. I don't know the specifications of what she is and is not supposed to eat so I'm unsure if what's being served is on that or not. It's very frustrating I know to not be able to navigate what happens at the other house and to feel like you are in it alone to provide more nutritious and specific food items. Jackie also can't make the food choices show up but it doesn't seem from my end like she's asking for them (but why would she kids like to eat out usually even when they feel icky afterwards).

Regarding tone - there is a possibility that Jackie doesn't have a good idea of her tone at times or of being rude. It's a pretty classic symptom of Autism that kids don't always get the impact their words or tone have on others. That is not to say it's to be excused but I do think that she likely comes by that naturally. Typically what I tell parents to do in those situations is not to get into a struggle about whether or not it was rude but simply to say, "I can not hear you when you talk that way and I do not wish to respond. When you find another tone please come back and we can talk" and then walk away. While you can't make her or force her to react differently you can remove yourself (as much as possible) from the argument.

I do think that your move will be great for you both and am excited it's pending as I know you've worked on that for a long time. I also know it's closer to school so hopefully that will even out things at your house with less drive time and more flexibility as well as not having grandparents around all the time who are not supportive to Jackie or you.

Regarding doctors I might recommend you look at the Humana insurance site and look for LGBTQ+ supportive folks, I think there should be a way to search it? If not I also know Out Care is a place to find supportive MD's and other resources for families. Having a supportive doctor is really helpful for sure.

I'll check in with her tonight!

Also -- I talked to Jackie about how mommy won't take her to the doctor....her mom does not tell her very important messages and I cannot trust that Jackie will get them if I only send to Jackie's phone because Jackie is a child....an example would be last time Jackie was with mommy, I said I needed to know measurements for tucking underwear so I could get it ordered asap but no response from mommy....Jackie said mommy never even said anything at all to her about the message. So I can write a statement with a diagnosis and that sometimes kids struggle to get to school when anxiety and other chronic illnesses are present. I can not write a note excusing Jackie for any days other than the ones when I see her (she did report to me that she didn't go to school Monday because she felt ill but I did not specifically see evidence of the illness necessarily, she participated fine). So I can easily write for days she has reported to me, in session, that she didn't go because she felt ill but by our medical standards I can only excuse days in which I see a child. I assume this may be the issue with the Pediatrician as well? Now....is that the Dr she sees for Chronic illness? Because while they can excuse specific days there might be a way to have the 504 include the increased absences due to chronic medical conditions. I assume that's part of the 504 currently?

Regarding the pattern, you as the parent, who has access to the records, absolutely have a right to call it in to CPS for educational neglect if you feel it's to that point. If school is at risk of expelling her for absences that might be an option. Although it doesn't seem like they will if it's part of her 504. Either way I am happy to address it with Jackie regarding the importance of attendance for getting work done and staying in good standing at Pheonix, I think she likes it there but I know lots of kids if offered the option to stay home might take it. What does Jackie say when you ask her?

I sent a text but I'm worried it didn't go through. I am still feeling under the weather and talking makes the coughing worse. I am going to ask Jackie to raincheck to next Monday at our regularly scheduled time as I don't think I'll be very helpful if all I do is cough at her! Please tell her I'm very sorry and I'll see her Monday.

Will do. I think holidays can sometimes be hard in general with being out of the routine and such but I will talk with her for sure tonight. We do "talk" but sometimes in a round about way. Jackie doesn't always like to talk directly but she's usually more than willing to if I bring it up. Thanks for the heads up.

The other place you might find helpful is the Fairness Campaign, it's my go to for all things legislation related:

https://www.fairness.org/

Chris Hartman is the director there and he's great at knowing what's new in the community and how to take legislative action in good ways.

Lastly....I think that OutCare and Queer KY could be resources as well as they something know where folks are headed for care they can't get here and resources for where folks are looking for trans care.

Hope those are helpful! I'll see Jackie tomorrow at 6:30pm!

Subject: Re: I re-read the letter and had a couple of questions

To be honest, regarding diagnosis, the letter really only needs to state the Gender Dysphoria diagnosis as that's all we are asking an Endocrinologist to treat. However, I included the other two diagnoses that I am currently working with which are ASD and Anxiety. However....I do realize that does not present the whole of the diagnosis that Jackie presents with but since I'm not actually treating the ADHD or the depression (meaning they aren't things we have current treatment objectives for) I only included the three I have treatment objectives for on her current treatment plan. That being said, when you all meet with an Endocrinologist they will likely want the full diagnostic picture and the medical prescriber should have records of the full diagnostic picture and the things she is being treated for with meds. I don't mind including them in a letter at all but since they aren't listed in my current chart documentation (other than the copies of past diagnostic profiles you gave me which are included in the chart) I just put the three we are currently treating. If you feel they need to be added I can do that and just put in there that it's by history and report.

Regarding your own concerns it's not really my area of expertise and I do not currently know of any online assessments that can be done. I feel like what you would need is a really good Neuropsych assessment and I wonder if your home health nurse might know of where to recommend you go? A Neuropsychologist should be able to start looking at those assessments or a Neurologist maybe as well. I'm surprised they didn't refer you to one when they did the MRI in 2022. Apologies that I don't know more in that area.

Judith Axelrod, and Meridian Health Dr. David Charles....I know that Seven Counties was not certain about ADHD....but with all of these other less bureaucratic agencies with highly qualified providers I think may be able to more accurately diagnose - although that is only my opinion (than larger organizations with more hoops, red tape, controlled more by outside sources / governmental agencies / etc....).....you know what I mean?

Anyway - just wondering if there was a reason why ADHD was not listed, and why depression was not listed - Jackie struggles with both in addition to the other things listed (and several physical health ailments) -- I understand not listing the physical health ailments....just wondered about the mental health ones....I'm sure you have your reasons, just trying to understand what those are....

My brain = no worky today....Having a tough day.....Darcie....this is a very personal and vulnerable question I am going to ask you....and it is with regard to my own health....I feel like my mental cognition is really fading....I don't know why....but sometimes I wonder if it is early Alzheimer's or early onset dementia or something...or mini-strokes....or anything that it could be....sometimes I get lost in neighborhoods I have known my entire life and can't find my way home....now I have dizziness and balance issues and vertigo which sometimes makes it impossible for me to drive in addition to the fatigue and pain....my parents don't give a damn about making any adjustments to help me....my mom ... I have trouble with balance in low and uneven light especially.....I asked them to leave the lights on for me....she has gone out of her way to seemingly show how apathetic she is with regard to my own safety.....it is very upsetting to me....I needed them on really bad the other night....and she told me her eyes hurt so she needed them off and that meant to me that she didn't care if I fell down or fell down the stairs or whatever....and I don't really think she would care if I am being honest.....today....I went upstairs...and I had turned all the lights on....I went downstairs for about 5 minutes before Jackie's ride came....and went back upstairs and all the lights were off and my mom was sitting in the dark straining her eyes to try to balance her checkbook.....I told her I had to turn the lights on so I didn't fall, and that upset her....she said she needed them off to make sure her poinsettia flowered properly around Christmas time....again....a plant is far more important than I am to my own mother....the thing is....I don't deserve to be treated like that....I've never done anything to deserve to be treated like that....No one should be treated like that anyway....I don't know if I told you....but when I literally WAS having a stroke here in 2017 the last time we had to live here due to my illness....I had to be outside...I couldn't get my words out right.....I knew what I was trying to say but it wouldn't work...the mechanism to say words.....I had to be outside to be able to breathe....my mom said she would not do CPR on me unless I went back inside ... if I collapsed....because it would hurt her knees if she had to do it outside....I mean how much more can you not value someone.....it is still very upsetting to me.....Tonight....I was trying to load the dishes in the dishwasher here because I try to do what I can...I recently had told her how it makes it much easier for me to put silverware in the top tray silverware holder....in the dishwasher....because I have widespread body fatigue and pain...and sometimes when I lean over I get even more dizzy and nearly pass out sometimes - presyncope.....well....she removed the top silverware tray and stated that her joints in her fingers hurt to get silverware out of the top....this is the environment in which I am DESPERATELY trying to escape for me AND for Jackie - more importantly for Jackie - but I am profoundly affected too.... Back to the alzheimers or dementia thing....is there some type of cognitive function testing that I can take remotely or online or something that would be 'official' and covered by Medicaid? I had a NeuroQuant brain MRI done in 2022 in Spring (maybe Winter)....and it came back showing 'profound brain atrophy' standardized for my age and gender...my brain's volume was like in the 9th percentile....I also have a spinal tumor now and cannot get doctors to take it seriously....and an arachnoid brain cyst that I have always had did not appear on the latest brain MRI and I have had several....I also feel like my spinal cord is adhering to the inside wall of my spinal canal near my cervical and thoracic spine....but again....doctors really don't care about helping people...>I'm stuck with Medicaid and don't know what to do....I am trying to survive at least until Jackie's 18th birthday....but things keep going wrong and I am unable to get the help that I need....Do you have any suggestions? Main question is about the ADHD for Jackie's letter - other stuff is just ancillary.....

Anyway - just wondering if there was a reason why ADHD was not listed, and why depression was not listed - Jackie struggles with both in addition to the other things listed (and several physical health ailments) -- I understand not listing the physical health ailments....just wondered about the mental health ones....I'm sure you have your reasons, just trying to understand what those are....

My brain = no worky today....Having a tough day.....Darcie....this is a very personal and vulnerable question I am going to ask you....and it is with regard to my own health....I feel like my mental cognition is really fading....I don't know why....but sometimes I wonder if it is early Alzheimer's or early onset dementia or something...or mini-strokes....or anything that it could be....sometimes I get lost in neighborhoods I have known my entire life and can't find my way home....now I have dizziness and balance issues and vertigo which sometimes makes it impossible for me to drive in addition to the fatigue and pain....my parents don't give a damn about making any adjustments to help me....my mom ... I have trouble with balance in low and uneven light especially.....I asked them to leave the lights on for me....she has gone out of her way to seemingly show how apathetic she is with regard to my own safety.....it is very upsetting to me....I needed them on really bad the other night....and she told me her eyes hurt so she needed them off and that meant to me that she didn't care if I fell down or fell down the stairs or whatever....and I don't really think she would care if I am being honest.....today....I went upstairs...and I had turned all the lights on....I went downstairs for about 5 minutes before Jackie's ride came....and went back upstairs and all the lights were off and my mom was sitting in the dark straining her eyes to try to balance her checkbook.....I told her I had to turn the lights on so I didn't fall, and that upset her....she said she needed them off to make sure her poinsettia flowered properly around Christmas time....again....a plant is far more important than I am to my own mother....the thing is....I don't deserve to be treated like that....I've never done anything to deserve to be treated like that....No one should be treated like that anyway....I don't know if I told you....but when I literally WAS having a stroke here in 2017 the last time we had to live here due to my illness....I had to be outside...I couldn't get my words out right.....I knew what I was trying to say but it wouldn't work...the mechanism to say words.....I had to be outside to be able to breathe....my mom said she would not do CPR on me unless I went back inside ... if I collapsed....because it would hurt her knees if she had to do it outside....I mean how much more can you not value someone.....it is still very upsetting to me.....Tonight....I was trying to load the dishes in the dishwasher here because I try to do what I can...I recently had told her how it makes it much easier for me to put silverware in the top tray silverware holder....in the dishwasher....because I have widespread body fatigue and pain...and sometimes when I lean over I get even more dizzy and nearly pass out sometimes - presyncope.....well....she removed the top silverware tray and stated that her joints in her fingers hurt to get silverware out of the top....this is the environment in which I am DESPERATELY trying to escape for me AND for Jackie - more importantly for Jackie - but I am profoundly affected too.... Back to the alzheimers or dementia thing....is there some type of cognitive function testing that I can take remotely or online or something that would be 'official' and covered by Medicaid? I had a NeuroQuant brain MRI done in 2022 in Spring (maybe Winter)....and it came back showing 'profound brain atrophy' standardized for my age and gender...my brain's volume was like in the 9th percentile....I also have a spinal tumor now and cannot get doctors to take it seriously....and an arachnoid brain cyst that I have always had did not appear on the latest brain MRI and I have had several....I also feel like my spinal cord is adhering to the inside wall of my spinal canal near my cervical and thoracic spine....but again....doctors really don't care about helping people...>I'm stuck with Medicaid and don't know what to do....I am trying to survive at least until Jackie's 18th birthday....but things keep going wrong and I am unable to get the help that I need....Do you have any suggestions? Main question is about the ADHD for Jackie's letter - other stuff is just ancillary.....

John

Hey John,

I have finished the letter and will sign and scan you a copy tomorrow when I am back in the office. :-)

Regarding Jackie's appt on Wednesday could we meet at 1pm instead of 6:30pm? I will be leaving town at 3pm for the holiday and figured we could meet earlier in the day since there isn't school.

Let me know!

Hi John. Just wanted to follow up per our conversation the other day. So, I've spoken to my higher up. Honestly, the systematic issues that were addressed are out of my scope of work. However, if you're still willing, I can try my best to assist with the details of your housing needs and help to navigate the waiver process, along with ensuring Jackie's needs are met as well. Let me know your thoughts. If you still want to proceed, I will go ahead and send you the case management intake paperwork for you to proactively complete for me. Thanks and have a good weekend.

Neurogenic Bladder (not on list - handled through First Urology - outside of Epic)...and several eye problems. I attached my current medications list also.

My animals are certified via a qualitified therapist as emotional support animals (2 cats) -- so no extra rent can be charged -- see attached.

Therapists I work with:

Madison Rhyne -- Talk Therapist -- U of L
madison.rhyne@louisville.edu

Theresa Adamchik -- Louisville Expressive Therapies -- Art Therapy theresa@louisvilleexpressivetherapies.com

Jackie is working with:
Darcie Taggart

Here are things Sjogren's causes...I suffer from most of these....obviously not the vaginal issues -- but for most of the others....

Symptoms vary from person to person but may include:

- Neurological problems, concentration/memory-loss, “brain fog”, dysautonomia, headaches
- Dry eyes, corneal ulcerations and infections
- Dry nose, recurrent sinusitis, nosebleeds
- Dry mouth, mouth sores, dental decay, difficulty with chewing, speech, taste and dentures
- Swollen, painful parotid/salivary glands
- Difficulty swallowing, heartburn, reflux, esophagitis
- Fatigue, vasculitis, lymphoma, dry skin, skin sensitivity to UV light
- Recurrent bronchitis, interstitial lung disease, pneumonia
- Arthritis, joint/muscle pain
- Abnormal liver function tests, chronic active autoimmune hepatitis, primary biliary cholangitis
- Peripheral neuropathy, Raynaud’s
- Stomach upset, gastroparesis, autoimmune pancreatitis
- Irritable bowel, autoimmune gastrointestinal dysmotility
- Interstitial cystitis, interstitial nephritis including renal tubular acidosis, glomerulonephritis
- Vaginal dryness, vulvodynia; chronic prostatitis

This is me:

And this is Jackie:

Jackie attends The Phoenix School of Discovery at 502 Wood Rd. in Lyndon, KY 40222.

Jackie's mom (my ex-wife) lives at Post Oak Apartments, for everyone's mental well-being - we need to not both live at the same place. Post Oak is literally right next door to the school.

II think I got everything in there that you wanted...

Just got some good news too.....hearing aids were approved by Kosair for Jackie....so they are granting $4,750 for the hearing aids.....grateful.....

If you have hesitation, can you tell me why?

I wish there were not such a high hurdle to cross just to be able to get into the PAGE clinic for them to do their own evaluation in endocrinology and to have access to those counselors etc... as stated before though -- I don't know if they are even able to do anything regarding SB 150's passage....

There is a telehealth appointment with Jackie's PCP in the morning and I am sure the letter will come up and she is going to ask us what is the status. I am already going to have to ask her for another referral to the page clinic as I think the other one expired.

If there is something you need from me on my end, that I have not provided, please let me know, and I will get it to you.

So update after pcp appt this morning...page clinic is no longer accepting people...only possibility is to go out of state for care or work with therapist. Page clinic is giving list of options. When Dr. Mahajan PCP gets that list and sends to me, I will also forward to you. Still probably need letter for care.

If you have hesitation, can you tell me why?

I wish there were not such a high hurdle to cross just to be able to get into the PAGE clinic for them to do their own evaluation in endocrinology and to have access to those counselors etc... as stated before though -- I don't know if they are even able to do anything regarding SB 150's passage....

There is a telehealth appointment with Jackie's PCP in the morning and I am sure the letter will come up and she is going to ask us what is the status. I am already going to have to ask her for another referral to the page clinic as I think the other one expired.

If there is something you need from me on my end, that I have not provided, please let me know, and I will get it to you.

So update after pcp appt this morning...page clinic is no longer accepting people...only possibility is to go out of state for care or work with therapist. Page clinic is giving list of options. When Dr. Mahajan PCP gets that list and sends to me, I will also forward to you. Still probably need letter for care.

How about we skip the session today and I will spend that time writing it tonight. Part of my difficulty is always finding the dedicated time to write letters which is often outside of my work day and since I work until 7:30 most nights and also on Sundays that just doesn't leave much of a window. Not an excuse just a reality. But I will do it tonight at 6:30 and get it to you this evening and then plan to see Jackie again next Monday. Does that work?

Sorry to hear the Page clinic isn't. I had feared that as they are moving kids to Chicago (or some of the other kids I see are going there). Hoping it doesn't come to that.

Let me take a look at my schedule for the week and see what I can work out. The annual play therapy conference is super busy and since it's in CA this year and it's usually all day like 7am to 7pm my timing is all off but I'll try to figure it out for sure. She is also totally welcome to email me and chat that way while we try to work it out.

I have Jackie now set up at 5:30pm every other Monday at her mom's house on those weeks and every other Wednesday at 6:30pm at your house on your weeks. I spoke with Lindsay and asked if that time would work and she seemed to think it would. I would love to be able to offer a 4pm appt but I currently don't have one. I could likely do a 3:30pm on her mom's weeks but I don't think she's home by then? Most of my afternoon appts are on the half hour. The 4pm the other day was sort of an anomaly in my schedule. So, I will plan to see Jackie at 5:30pm next Monday. If an earlier time comes up on those weeks I will make sure to let her know. Thanks!

I know we will see each other Tuesday BUT wanted to revisit the best times for Jackie to see me on your weeks. I can keep this 6:30pm time on Wednesdays or I can do the Monday (but I know it's not the easiest for you). Whichever of those two days works best for you works for me.

Let's set up a time for you and I to meet outside of Jackie's session. I keep starting an email back to you and get sidetracked by sessions and such. BUT I do think it's helpful to address and I know how hard it is for Jackie when you are in her sessions. Could you do next Tuesday, 9/19 at 9:30am? I know it's the week she is with her mom.

Regarding eating, remind me what Meds Jackie takes. I do think that it's not wholly unusual for kids her age not to eat during the day, especially depending on different medications but I'm happy to talk with her about it during session for sure. I do get the importance of nutrition for kids I just know there is limited time for eating and lots of kids have lots of reasons why they don't eat at school that isn't because they are having any specific food related issues. Sometimes kids just don't and I think sometimes making sure they have plenty of options for snacks and breakfast and dinner and times they are not at school is the best and then having a pediatrician just make sure (not all the time but at regular appts) that the weight isn't dropping drastically is the best option. It's especially not strange for girls and kids with sensory related issues which is what I'm assuming the hand washing relates to. It could be related to body image issues but I don't get that feel from her at least not in the first couple of sessions, I will continue to monitor as well. It definitely could also be related to the stomach issues she currently already has but for sure if there are recommendations that her doctor has said she needs to follow those would be the things I would want to do.

I want to make sure that I have the list of things you would like me to address down (in addition to the letter which is on my radar) from various emails as I feel I may have missed some:

- Night terrors
- Video Game Disorder
- Following up with Stacy to make sure we are OK with keeping Case management
- Difficulties in communication that seem to have increased (as she gets older and doesn't want to talk as much)

If there are others please let me know. I will happily follow up with another email as soon as I am able regarding these other concerns I have listed and again extend the invitation for you and I to meet and touch based next week if you would like. I completely get the concerns and fears related to Jackie and I think it's very normal to worry about our kids and parenting them as they get older is so hard and it's hard to realize they need/want to separate from us in age appropriate ways for sure.

I look forward to seeing Jackie this evening. Let me know if next week will work for you!

I know we will see each other Tuesday BUT wanted to revisit the best times for Jackie to see me on your weeks. I can keep this 6:30pm time on Wednesdays or I can do the Monday (but I know it's not the easiest for you). Whichever of those two days works best for you works for me.

For this week let's do 6:30pm on Wednesday. I am headed back from Denver today and while we get home around 4pm I already have a telehealth appt at 6:30pm. I have that appt every other Monday at 6:30 which will likely fall on your weeks. I will look at my calendar tonight when I get home to determine what we could do on your weeks moving forward since the 5:30 doesn't work on Mondays and find you a time for another day. Apologies for the delay in reply as I have been traveling.

I will also respond to your other concerns upon my return to regular work hours tomorrow.

Thanks.

Will any of these times work? If not, then Jackie can meet a little bitty bit earlier, but would be in the car with me, without privacy, on the way home from school, which would not be ideal - but we will try to do whatever we can to make it work.

How about we try for either 3:30 or 4:30pm on Wednesday next week, instead of Mondays. If Wednesdays are generally better for you I feel certain I can make that work.
I just had someone move off of Wednesdays and while 3:30 will ALWAYS work I might be able to do 4:30 as well - I'm assuming 4:30 would be easier for school. :-) Let me know if that works for next week and which time is better.

How about we try for either 3:30 or 4:30pm on Wednesday next week, instead of Mondays. If Wednesdays are generally better for you I feel certain I can make that work.
I just had someone move off of Wednesdays and while 3:30 will ALWAYS work I might be able to do 4:30 as well - I'm assuming 4:30 would be easier for school. :-) Let me know if that works for next week and which time is better.

Darcie,

On Mondays (of my weeks with Jackie), I take her to school, then rush back to my house, to meet a nurse who is present and takes care of me during the IVIG infusions that I receive.

I get a BOLUS of Saline first, and I get 500 to 750 ml of Saline post infusion.

I do well to get Jackie to school by 8:30/8:40 when we leave Shepherdsville at 7:45 (due to morning rush hour traffic). Mornings are also really tough for me. As soon as I get Jackie to school, I turn around and rush back to Shepherdsville, to meet my nurse, whose name is Whitney (presently) - I have had several nurses since May 2021 when IVIG infusions started - Jackie may talk about Whitney sometimes.

Anyway - it takes time, sometimes, to get an IV going - it depends on how dehydrated my body is at any given time, and how many sticks it takes, etc...then the pre-infusion saline takes about 1 hour to run in.

Let's say Whitney starts the IV at 9:30 without any issues, then 1 hour for the saline would put it at 10:30...then 4 solid hours for the IVIG to infuse puts it a 2:30...then say 45 minutes for the post infusion saline puts the time at 3:15pm, then there is generally 15 minutes for observation afterward and for nurse to clean things up in terms of supplies used etc...so 3:30...then 45 minutes to get to Phoenix School (which gets out at 3:20 - so Jackie walked to mommy's house until I could pick her up on the last Monday of my week due to IVIG taking so long)...so that puts me there at 4:15 -- then if I immediately turned around and went back to Shepherdsville that would take me probably at least until 5:15 due to rush hour traffic in the evening -- and there is no margin of error for anything in there - like needing to use the bathroom e.g.....wrecks on the highway e.g. etc....

Can we make it 6pm on Mondays on my weeks? That is still really pushing it for me, but I am trying to make as close to your time you listed as possible...

Yep. She did a great job! I am wondering if after today session we can put Jackie in for a 5:30pm session every Monday evening (and she can join from whichever house she is at). She seems to enjoy meeting and i am enjoying getting to know her.

I did speak with her today about the possibility of meeting with Mr. Charlie at school. She just really seems to feel that being pulled out of class is too much at this point and she does not need more therapy services than what she will be getting from me. I can see no reason why this isn't OK unless she is having a lot of school related difficulties. She does not identify any at this time and stated she really likes the new school and that she feels missing class would cause her anxiety rather than be helpful. I do know some kids just feel this is true. We did talk a little about the session and how it went and her frustration with you regarding feeling like she didn't have a choice in the matter. I do think she will be OK without school services at this time unless there are specific school issues to address. I am also happy to work on those as well if needed.

Hope you are well.

I have spoken with Mr. Sawyer and I will happily follow up on that with Jackie tomorrow during our appt. I can appreciate the desire for urgency in the letter but I would not be doing my due diligence (nor would they accept a letter from me) if I wrote it after one session of intake. Part of the letter specifies the length of time I have seen a child and one session won't really be enough for us to make a determination. Even the Social Worker at the Page clinic often wants to meet with an individual at least 3-4 times before they sign off on scheduling with the Endocrinologist. They used to have a Social Worker on staff down there specifically to meet with kids and make those determinations which is often who you would meet with first but I suspect with HB 150 in place they have changed that policy or they have lost that position - either way I promise we will be working towards it and I will write it when I am ready and feel like it's appropriate to do so. I do understand that those changes are hard to watch happen but it's imperative that I, as the professional you are asking to write the letter, do my best to meet the ethical guidelines of practice set forth by my license. So I need to meet with Jackie a few times before we get to that point.

Something else that has come across my mind tho, where did Jackie get the diagnosis of Autism? I know there was testing done at Seven Counties a while ago but didn't see that documentation on there. Is there testing from somewhere else that is more recent? Thanks.

How about Thursday, September 7th at 4pm via Zoom - seems like Jackie says that is Lindsey's week - so I'll put the appt in and you can let me know. :-) Thanks!

It is totally fine! Let's keep it. In fact, I can go ahead and jump on now which works in your favor since they are gone now. Does that work? Click the link whenever you're ready!

I completely understand. 8am isn't my favorite time either for sure but I am sure with health related issues that makes it even harder. I am headed out of town tomorrow afternoon for two days to far eastern KY to give a two day training and then headed to Colorado immediately after that for a brief trip with family. So....then I will be back in the office next Sunday when I am seeing Jaqquelyn. I will make sure to use the preferred name from now on, language is powerful and names are important! I have read all of the info you provided on the client history form and with that plus the documents your attached and also my knowledge of your daughter as a Supervisor for her previous therapist at Seven Counties I feel certain I have plenty of background to work with. I am more than comfortable working with Jaqquelyn to get her a letter for gender affirming care and have worked with many children to help them become their most brilliant and amazing selves. I look forward to meeting her next Sunday via Zoom and please don't hesitate to reach out this week via email if there is anything else you think of that might be helpful.

If you tell me what would be most helpful for you to know, I can send you an email with pertinent information to help you gain a more full understanding of Jaqquelyn's situation.

I can send more than this if needed.

Jaqquelyn's mother has suffered with mental health issues and was in and out of the mental health hospital last year a number of times due to suicidality.

Jaqquelyn's father suffers from debilitating physical health illness and anxiety and depression.

Jackie struggles with suicidal ideation a lot and has been actively suicidal.

I want to do all that I can, to make sure that Jackie does not act on any suicidal ideation she has. It scares me especially because she has autism, and also has a great deal of impulsivity at times due to ADHD.

Art therapy has been the modality of therapy that has helped her the most, and she has seen several therapists in her life.

Hi Darcie.

I know you are getting ready to be out of pocket for a while, but I thought maybe it would be helpful to talk about Jackie's case prior to her first session with you to help give you background information etc... if it would be helpful, I can also send you her neuropsychiatric evaluation, and her meds list and her conditions list etc... and some older psychological testing etc... too. Would any of this be helpful? Jaqquelyn is 12 and puberty has started and I am trying my hardest to help her at least get on a puberty blocker or something so she has the best chance to be the most feminine she can in life with the least amount of medical interventions necessary...you know? She is my only child...I love her with all of my heart...I only want the best for her...

> Our custody schedule is weekly. Each Friday evening, Jaqquelyn goes with me, or with mom.

If you tell me what would be most helpful for you to know, I can send you an email with pertinent information to help you gain a more full understanding of Jaqquelyn's situation.

I can send more than this if needed.

Jaqquelyn's mother has suffered with mental health issues and was in and out of the mental health hospital last year a number of times due to suicidality.

Jaqquelyn's father suffers from debilitating physical health illness and anxiety and depression.

Jackie struggles with suicidal ideation a lot and has been actively suicidal.

I want to do all that I can, to make sure that Jackie does not act on any suicidal ideation she has. It scares me especially because she has autism, and also has a great deal of impulsivity at times due to ADHD.

Art therapy has been the modality of therapy that has helped her the most, and she has seen several therapists in her life.

Hi Darcie.

I know you are getting ready to be out of pocket for a while, but I thought maybe it would be helpful to talk about Jackie's case prior to her first session with you to help give you background information etc... if it would be helpful, I can also send you her neuropsychiatric evaluation, and her meds list and her conditions list etc... and some older psychological testing etc... too. Would any of this be helpful? Jaqquelyn is 12 and puberty has started and I am trying my hardest to help her at least get on a puberty blocker or something so she has the best chance to be the most feminine she can in life with the least amount of medical interventions necessary...you know? She is my only child...I love her with all of my heart...I only want the best for her...

I can take care of it on my end. AND sorry about the appt confusion. Since we already did that then let's go with the 27th at 11:30am.

When it's time for the appt on the 27th you will log back into the portal account and there will be a button to push to start the session and that will put you in my waiting room. :-)

Thanks for your response and the clarification. That has not always been the policy at the PAGE clinic so I'm wondering if they no longer employ their in house therapist who used to meet with kids to get those letters written. That being said I am very familiar with HB 150 and the implications (and difficulties) that it poses for our transgender youth and their rights. I knew the PAGE clinic required letters prior to starting any sort of HRT or puberty blockers but I'm guessing they have had to get stricter in their policies since HB 150 and all it's things were passed. I know there is still hope that they will overturn it but for now we live with where we are and support kids how we can. I am so grateful Jackie has you to be supportive of her! Parental support is so key (even when there are other family members who are not).

I completely get the morning difficulty. Why don't we try instead to meet on Sunday, August 27th. Normally I have a little more availability but I am going to be out of town from the evening of the 20th thru the 26th so that's putting a little kink in my scheduling. I could do 11:30am that day (the 27th) and likely that is your weekend and a little later in the day for Jackie to not get up so early. Does that sound OK? That's actually better for me too as the 8am would have been pushing it all the way around.

Also, I realized when you gave me your child's given name that I know your child from my role as a Supervisor with Seven Counties Services. I used to Supervise Lindsey Smith and I believe that is who Jackie saw when she was going there, is that correct? If so, and with your permission, I could also consult with Lindsey regarding the letter which might help us be able to write it faster since she would have the history longer than even me.

I will get the paperwork and documentation sent to you this evening. It will come from Creating Connection via Therapy Notes. I will also include a Release of Information for Seven Counties if you want me to be able to include some information from previous therapy services there so we can get moving faster. Looking forward to working with Jackie and with your family.

Hi Darcie.

Theresa provided your information to me as someone that could see my child Jackie (Jackie was born male but identifies female - and uses she/her pronouns).

I've been trying for several months to get a letter (required by the PAGE Clinic at Norton) for Jackie to be able to begin to receive 'gender dysphoria' related services there. I don't like the word dysphoria as it implies there is something wrong or negative...that is why I put it in quotes.

I have attached the letter requirements from the PAGE Clinic so you can see if you think this is something you will be able to help with once Jackie has seen you for a little while.

Jackie is 12 and beginning puberty so there is an urgency to the matter that I have tried my best to attend to, but we've had trouble finding someone for Jackie.

Please see the attached letter from the PAGE Clinic (in terms of requirement). Jackie has done the best with art therapy out of the several modes of therapy we've tried/experienced over the years.

Please contact me to let me know a good time that Jackie could get scheduled to see you (and if you do telehealth) - and also if you accept KY Humana Medicaid MCO (Healthy Horizons) insurance.

I prefer email, due vastly to the sheer amount of doctor appointments that I have -- so I often cannot answer the phone. However, if you should prefer to reach me by phone, my number is 502.956.0052. Texting me is okay also. I am looking for an appointment for right after school pretty much (or maybe a little later) - I just know it is easier for Jackie to be at home once at home....that is true for all of us isn't it?

That's actually better for me too as the 8am would have been pushing it all the way around.

Also, I realized when you gave me your child's given name that I know your child from my role as a Supervisor with Seven Counties Services. I used to Supervise Lindsey Smith and I believe that is who Jackie saw when she was going there, is that correct? If so, and with your permission, I could also consult with Lindsey regarding the letter which might help us be able to write it faster since she would have the history longer than even me.

I will get the paperwork and documentation sent to you this evening. It will come from Creating Connection via Therapy Notes. I will also include a Release of Information for Seven Counties if you want me to be able to include some information from previous therapy services there so we can get moving faster. Looking forward to working with Jackie and with your family.

Hi Darcie.

Theresa provided your information to me as someone that could see my child Jackie (Jackie was born male but identifies female - and uses she/her pronouns).

I've been trying for several months to get a letter (required by the PAGE Clinic at Norton) for Jackie to be able to begin to receive 'gender dysphoria' related services there. I don't like the word dysphoria as it implies there is something wrong or negative...that is why I put it in quotes.

I have attached the letter requirements from the PAGE Clinic so you can see if you think this is something you will be able to help with once Jackie has seen you for a little while.

Jackie is 12 and beginning puberty so there is an urgency to the matter that I have tried my best to attend to, but we've had trouble finding someone for Jackie.

Please see the attached letter from the PAGE Clinic (in terms of requirement). Jackie has done the best with art therapy out of the several modes of therapy we've tried/experienced over the years.

Please contact me to let me know a good time that Jackie could get scheduled to see you (and if you do telehealth) - and also if you accept KY Humana Medicaid MCO (Healthy Horizons) insurance.

I prefer email, due vastly to the sheer amount of doctor appointments that I have -- so I often cannot answer the phone. However, if you should prefer to reach me by phone, my number is 502.956.0052. Texting me is okay also. I am looking for an appointment for right after school pretty much (or maybe a little later) - I just know it is easier for Jackie to be at home once at home....that is true for all of us isn't it?

Thanks for your response and the clarification. That has not always been the policy at the PAGE clinic so I'm wondering if they no longer employ their in house therapist who used to meet with kids to get those letters written. That being said I am very familiar with HB 150 and the implications (and difficulties) that it poses for our transgender youth and their rights. I knew the PAGE clinic required letters prior to starting any sort of HRT or puberty blockers but I'm guessing they have had to get stricter in their policies since HB 150 and all it's things were passed. I know there is still hope that they will overturn it but for now we live with where we are and support kids how we can. I am so grateful Jackie has you to be supportive of her! Parental support is so key (even when there are other family members who are not).

I completely get the morning difficulty. Why don't we try instead to meet on Sunday, August 27th. Normally I have a little more availability but I am going to be out of town from the evening of the 20th thru the 26th so that's putting a little kink in my scheduling. I could do 11:30am that day (the 27th) and likely that is your weekend and a little later in the day for Jackie to not get up so early. Does that sound OK? That's actually better for me too as the 8am would have been pushing it all the way around.

Hello John,

I would be happy to see Jackie. Who does she see at the PAGE clinic? I do think they have a therapist who writes these types of letters but I am also happy to assess and write one as well! I enjoy working with kids and especially helping them grow more into who they are! I too find that I dislike that a kid has to have a gender dysphoria diagnosis to receive affirming care and wish it was not so but I do get that this is the world we currently live in.

I accept Humana Medicaid and would be happy to do telehealth if that is what Jackie prefers although I do often tell kids if they want to do a hybrid or ever want to come into the office they absolutely can.

My after schools are very busy as you can imagine but I will make every effort to get her in for those times that work! For a first meeting/intake could we do next Sunday the 20th at 8am? I know that is really early BUT my after school appts are full this coming week and I am out of town the week after so I would love to get a start sooner rather than later.

If that works please let me know Jackie's DOB and I will send you an email to get a portal account started from Therapy Notes which is our electronic records platform. I look forward to meeting you and Jackie.

Hi Megan.

I realize you are probably already gone from your office, but I wanted to check to see if you were able to get everything you needed to close your open case.

Please let me know. Thank you.

Hi Megan.

Of course. I left you a message after you called last week, but I hadn't heard back from you. The only report that I am aware of is from 2017, and involved a charge of child abuse against my ex-wife, and was filed in Colorado. Is that still open?? After 7 years??

I didn't see your email until today.

So you know, my son is now my daughter (male to female transgender). She goes by Jackie and prefers the full name Jaqquelyn. We have not made the official legal name change yet, however, so legally, as of now, still, Jackie is Jack A. Fouts. So when you talk to her, please refer to her as Jackie and use she/her pronouns.

Subject: Some of other things....

Thought of these after you had left, but still relevant.

In 2022, Jackie's then PCP, Dr. Mahajan, at Norton, had told us that Jackie was exhibiting symptoms of Long Covid, and Jackie was indeed....especially with an exacerbation of pain, exacerbation of headaches, newer onset worse short term memory (which Dr. Mahajan had said she'd seen in a number of children), and extreme fatigue. She had us go to a Cardiologist, to Physical Rehabilitation Medicine, and Pulmonology for Jackie. Jackie already has established care at a Family Allergy and Asthma practice. Jackie already sees a Neurologist - Dr. Rogers at Norton, Gastroenterologist - Dr. Stocker or NP Lindsay McElmurray at U of L Motility Department....Jackie was first diagnosed with Gastroparesis around the age of 3 or 4 I think...that was a long time ago...the diagnosis was done at Cincinnati Children's Hospital using the gold standard test....the nuclear imaging looking for delayed gastric emptying....Jackie has delayed gastric emptying in phases 2 and 4 of digestion according to that test.....I have had Jackie in therapy since Jackie was a small child because I always knew something was not the same as other children....

Jackie was very sensitive, and still is, to light at times...to sound....sensory inputs....Jackie saw Dr. Tonya Stockhammer (Psychologist at StrongMinds) when Jackie was 5 or 6....prior to that...Jackie saw Dr. Lara West in Corydon....Dr. Stockhammer advised us to see Dr. Judith Axelrod at SquareOne MD (one of the best physicians / developmental pediatricians in the region)....Dr. Axelrod confirmed ADHD when Jackie was 6 I believe...Jackie was in therapy at school that I had arranged in 2019 or 2020. I had asked also, if Jackie could be seen by an in-school therapist...and...by an out of school therapist...because Jackie was struggling with some things (and weren't we all....it was the time of the great pandemic of COVID)...which was not so great a time. I was able to get that set up through Seven Counties...so Jackie was seeing Ms. Sanchez at school...and was seeing Lindsey Smith outside of school, so was having therapy sessions 2 times per week...this went on into 2022...at which time, Jackie began being homeschooled - on 2/22/2022 (easy date to remember at least)... Jackie had been having issues with migraines, cluster headaches, and cyclical vomiting syndrome in addition to her anxiety and depression. She was also struggling with pain issues and invisible disability issues....Jackie was seeing Lindsey Smith well into 2022 (I believe through the end of the year)...Jackie had also been enrolled in Art Therapy as of then. Jack was in art therapy through Louisville Expressive Therapies from around August 2022 through February 2023.

At L.E.T., Jackie initially saw Theresa Adamchik, later Dani Creamer (intern), and after that saw Akilah Cherry. Jackie enjoyed art therapy, but Akhilah said she was not able to continue seeing Jackie due to not feeling comfortable dealing with transgender issues which she had not been trained on if I remember correctly - or maybe was just not comfortable tackling transgenderism with everything else.

So Lindsey Smith had left Seven Counties, and Akilah had not felt comfortable with gender affirming therapy, nor was she able to provide what was needed for Jackie to begin receiving appropriate transgender care -- we needed a specific letter from a gender-affirming therapy group to be able to get

Jackie into the P.A.G.E. clinic at the NOVAK Center downtown (specialized in Endocrinology, etc....)...oh...at the end of 2022 and in the Summer 2022...and maybe even somewhat earlier in the year, I had also finally been able to get Jackie into ABA therapy...which was recommended for Jackie since Jackie was younger...

When Jackie was younger...it was not affordable at $200 an hour with a recommended 20 to 40 hours per week....that would have been $4000 to $8000 per week out of pocket or $16000 to $32000 per month out of pocket...and was not a feasible solution in the past...at least not for any family I have ever known. Finally, in 2022 when I was able to receive Medicaid, and Jackie was also, ABA therapy was a covered benefit. In early 2022, I had met with the coordinator for the ABA company...and we had been on the waiting list for a long time....6 months to a year....still...even after meeting with the coordinator...it took months before we were assigned an ABA therapist.....so in 2022...Jackie was seeing an art therapist, a regular psychotherapist at 7 Counties, and an ABA Therapist....I think in the 3rd quarter of 2023 is when the ABA therapist left the company she'd been with, so we were again left adrift trying to find services.

When I spoke to the psychiatry department through Norton, they asked about medications, service providers (physicians), therapists, and stated there was no need for Jackie to have any additional psychiatric help...and they strongly complimented me on my parenting and doing everything possible to take the best care of Jackie that was possible.

In 2023....Lindsey, the Seven Counties therapist left to go elsewhere...and the art therapist had stopped seeing Jackie....we were struggling to find appropriate gender-affirming care for Jackie to get the needed letter for the PAGE clinic...we were referred to a therapy agency that operates solely via telehealth...and after being shuffled through therapists...that 'they' assigned Jackie to....they decided to not see Jackie...it was a big let down....

Darcie Taggart began seeing Jackie shortly after that. From my calendar, it looks like Jackie began seeing Darcie around August of 2023....Jackie's neuropsychiatric evaluation that I had done in 2022 in the middle of the year also came back showing Jackie as having Autism Spectrum Disorder Level 2 and ADHD. It was done by Dr. David Charles at Meridian Behavioral Health.

In late 2022....we had whole genome sequencing done with the results coming back in early 2023 showing that Jackie had one copy of a pathogenic gene, and I had 2 copies of it....the defective gene shows both of us have a primary immune deficiency disorder or inborn error of immunity. That pathogenicity can lead to some of the things Jackie was...and...is....experiencing health-wise.

I'd also applied for Jackie to receive SSI due to all of the mental and physical health issues that she was experiencing, and she was found disabled as of May 2023....now....however...she is listed through SSA as just falling under the umbrella of the disability benefit that I am receiving due to her being the child of a disabled worker...which means a small but slightly larger amount than if she were only collecting SSI. Jackie is on the waiting list, also, for the Michelle P. Waiver, but the list is several years long, so I don't know if she will even be able to access waiver services.

Jackie continues to see Darcie and Darcie has been really a good fit for Jackie.

Please let me know once you have officially closed the case, and please provide documentation to me once that has occurred. I think you said you would, but I want to make sure I ask for that for my records, please.

Okay no problem. Thanks for reaching out - yes I understand about the insurance and billing situation and that is yet another reason why I, too, was confused about whether service would be covered or not.

I have 'Traditional KY Medicaid' with no MCO....that is because I am on the Home and Community Based Services Medicaid Waiver program.

Here is Jackie's card (which says Jack because her legal name is not yet changed to Jaqquelyn - so on insurance documents still Jack A. Fouts....Jackie's chosen name is Jaqquelyn A. Fouts with the nickname Jackie. Jackie uses she/her pronouns).

Telehealth is what we would like to have set up - or after an initial visit or whatever your rule may be.

I, of course, do not have any knowledge of what my ex-wife's insurance is...

You can reach my ex-wife by calling her at (502) 475-6896, but she prefers email so lindsayfoutscpa@gmail.com.

Thank you Tayler.

Please send me a copy of the front and back of your insurance card and your child's if they are different. We will also need a copy of your ex-wife's insurance card. Before I can move forward with anything, I have to speak with the billing department about how this would be billed. You can respond to this email with that information and once I have spoken with the billing team I will reach back out to you with an update. Thank you.

I have copied my ex-wife, Lindsay, and my child's therapist, Darcie Taggart, on this. Family therapy is an important piece that Jackie does not have. It is now August 20th....what seems to be the hold up? Are you all just disinterested by helping Jackie?

REFERRAL QUESTION

Jack Fouts is an 11-year-old male who was referred for an evaluation given concerns for cognitive, attentional, and social functioning.

CHIEF COMPLAINT & CURRENT SYMPTOMS

Upon interview with Jack and his father, Mr. John Fouts, they reported a history of difficulties with complex medical problems, such as cyclical vomiting syndrome, small fiber polyneuropathy, gastroparesis, and difficulties with sensory integration, dysphagia, dysautonomia, migraines, and cluster headaches. They also reported a history of mental health challenges such as ADHD and ODD. Currently, Mr. Fouts reported Jack experiences intense rejection sensitivity, dysphoria, anxiety, depression, suicidal ideation, and hypersensitivity to certain lights, sounds, and textures contrasted by periods of needing intense pressure and/or other forms of stimulation that can "flip on a dime." Mr. Fouts reported Jack has been significantly bullied throughout his educational history and is now being homeschooled. Mr. Fouts shared Jack is quite defiant, expresses frequent and intense suicidal ideation in response to any attempts to correct his behavior, and struggles with reciprocal conversations. He reported Jack regularly brings the conversation back to topics of his own interest (such as cats), does not demonstrate concern over others' wellbeing, prefers to play alone, and does not want to participate in group activities. Jack's father shared Jack struggles with participating in personal hygiene, such as taking baths and brushing his teeth, requires anticipatory guidance, struggles with changes to his routine, demonstrates fixated interests, and is significantly reluctant to try new things. Additionally, he reported Jack demonstrates issues with understanding abstract ideas, innuendos and more nuanced comedy, and struggles with understanding that others can have different opinions and/or perspectives.

PSYCHIATRIC HISTORY AND TREATMENT

Mr. Fouts denied a previous history of inpatient psychiatric care for Jack, although Jack has been treated via acute care for mental health issues and has a history of suicidal ideation. Jack did endorse a previous history of both visual and auditory hallucinations, particularly when taking higher doses of Adderall and when taking amitriptyline. A history of previous psychological testing was reported and significant for ADHD and a rule out of Level Autism Spectrum Disorder. Jack currently sees Ms. Lindsey Smith, LPCC, LPATA for individual therapy at Seven Counties Services and Ms. Theresa Adamchik, ATR-BC, LPAT, LPCC-S for art therapy at Louisville Expressive Therapies. According to Mr. Fouts, both have expressed concerns that Jack may be on the Autism Spectrum. He reported that therapy has been helpful thus far, especially art therapy.

ASSESSMENT OF SUBSTANCE USE

No substance use history was reported.

TRAUMA HISTORY

According to Mr. Fouts, Jack has experienced significant emotional and psychological trauma from the experience of his parents' divorce. Additionally, he shared that Jack has suffered an extensive history of bullying. Lastly, Mr. Fouts shared that living in intense and chronic pain likely has contributed to symptoms of traumatic stress.

CURRENT MEDICATIONS

Adderall 5 mg XR
Loratadine 10 mg
Multivitamin (2 gummies)
Famotidine 40 mg
Clonidine 0.1 mg XR

ALLERGIES

Mr. Fouts reported Jack experiences seasonal allergies and has a history of hallucinations at higher doses of Adderall and while taking amitriptyline. He is also reportedly allergic to many molds, pollens, grasses, and has experienced a severe adverse reaction to Prevacid (lansoprazole).

MEDICAL HISTORY

Mr. Fouts indicated Jack currently has Gastroesophageal Reflux Disease (GERD), gastroparesis (with delayed emptying at phases 2 and 4), cyclical vomiting syndrome, small fiber polyneuropathy, migraines, cluster headaches (concentrated around his right orbitofrontal region), ADHD, and Central Auditory Processing Disorder (CAPD). A history of head injury was denied. He has a history of one known seizure, which was febrile seizure when he was much younger. According to Mr. Fouts, Jack had an abnormal EEG in all 3 stages, but a 24-hour EEG was normal and thus no diagnosis was made. Jack also reportedly has a history of breaking a bone in his hand when he was younger. Currently, Mr. Fouts reported Jack experiences variable sleep patterns with periods of struggling with sleep onset, maintenance, and insomnia (which may be related to his neuropathy). Jack also typically struggles with anxiety and prefers to sleep with his father and mother when at their respective houses. Jack is currently on target with his height and weight, although his appetite is typically diminished and lower than expected for a child his age.

FAMILY MEDICAL AND PSYCHIATRIC HISTORY

Mr. Fouts reported dealing with extreme and chronic health difficulties. He shared that he has a history of small fiber polyneuropathy, erythromelalgia, fibromyalgia, Cramp Fasciculation Syndrome, migraines, possibly Multi-Systemic Sjogren's Syndrome, and a host of other chronic health conditions.

FAMILY HISTORY/LIVING SITUATION

Mr. Fouts stated Jack currently lives with his father part-time and his mother parttime in a joint custody "50/50" arrangement. Mr. Fouts indicated he and Jack's mother struggle greatly with co-parenting due to very different parenting philosophies. Mr. Fouts stated, "There are no consequences at his mother's house." Jack has reportedly met his mother's boyfriends and one of his father's girlfriends. Mr. Fouts reported his ex-girlfriend struggled with severe Borderline Personality Disorder and died by suicide in September 2020. Mr. Fouts stated this has been an emotionally difficult experience for Jack, as he was close with her and did witness his father's ex-girlfriend in crisis at times.

DEVELOPMENTAL HISTORY

Mr. Fouts denied experiencing any special situations or problems during Jack's mother's pregnancy with Jack. When he was delivered, the umbilical cord was wrapped around his neck and did require medical interventions. His APGAR scores were normal upon being released from the hospital. That said, Mr. Fouts indicated that Jack was either early for or met all major developmental milestones on time. When he was three years old, however, Mr. Fouts reported noticing Jack acted differently than his same aged peers. For instance, he reported Jack struggled with intense aggression, was "extremely colicky," and "said no to everything." He reportedly did not sleep through the night and often only required three hours of sleep. Mr. Fouts reported Jack has a history of lining his toys up, self-stimulating behaviors, and visual fascination. According to available records, Jack was evaluated as a young child and diagnosed with ADHD, Combined Type.

EDUCATIONAL/OCCUPATIONAL HISTORY

Mr. Fouts stated Jack recently graduated the 5th grade via homeschooling (with most of the schoolyear being completed at Bloom Elementary). He indicated Jack has been in homeschooling since February 22, 2022. He was reportedly pulled from Bloom Elementary School after two notices to the superintendent and several attempts to get the bullying from other students to cease (with little to no changes). For instance, Jack indicated students would kick him and tease him for wearing flipflops (which is in his 504 due to issues with neuropathy). Current academic concerns were endorsed in many subjects, although Mr. Fouts indicated he is uncertain to what degree Jack's difficulties are COVID19-related and/or issues with fixated interests.

SOCIAL HISTORY

Jack stated his main hobbies include playing video games, playing outside, playing mini golf, drawing, and playing with his cats. Mr. Fouts indicated Jack appears to struggle with making new friends and maintaining friendships. He indicated this has been an issue since early childhood for "as long as (he) can remember." Jack indicated he was uncertain as to what makes somebody a friend aside from people who play with him.

LEGAL ISSUES

No personal legal history was reported aside from experiencing his parents' divorce.

BEHAVIORAL OBSERVATIONS

Jack was assessed over the course of one half-day evaluation. He arrived for his appointment on time and was accompanied by his mother and father. Jack appeared well-groomed and was dressed appropriately for the weather. He was evaluated while on his current stimulant medication. He demonstrated adequate hearing and vision for the purposes of testing (although there were mild indications of troubles with hearing). Of note, Mr. Fouts indicated Jack was provided with hearing aids approximately a week and a half prior to the date of the feedback. Jack reported obtaining an adequate night's rest the night before and appeared rested. His speech was normal for rhythm, rate, and prosody, and the content was organized. Both his comprehension and processing speeds appeared to be within normal limits. Jack demonstrated adequate attention to the task at hand, although he refused to complete several assessments such as particular subtests on the WIAT-III and any part of the WRAML-3. Jack's mood was mostly euthymic with congruent affect. Rapport was established with Jack as he was, at times, friendly and open with the examiner. Jack appeared to put forth good, consistent effort, and therefore, the current results are believed to be an accurate reflection of his functioning at this time.

RESULTS

In the following sections, performances were measured, and ratings obtained that were then converted into a "comparison score" or, in other words, a "standardized score." This score is intended to indicate where a performance or rating stands in comparison to other individuals in a similar age range. Standard Scores are sometimes used for interpretation, which have a mean (average) of 100 and standard deviation of 15. T-Scores are also used, which have a mean of 50 and a standard deviation of 10. Scaled scores are also used, which have a mean of 10 and a standard deviation of 3. The table below is provided to help understand each of these ranges and what they mean. Average scores reflect "healthy, normal functioning" when compared to the standardization sample, while scores falling outside of the Average range reflect areas of strength and weakness. Other measures simply yield a total score that connects to a descriptive category/range or that is interpreted based on whether a "cut-off" is reached (i.e., whether that score crosses a threshold criterion). Lastly, some measures are evaluated based on the content or characteristics of the individual's responses to ambiguous stimuli.

Scaled Score Range	T-Score Range	Standard Score Range	Qualitative Description
16-19+	70-80+	130-140+	Very Superior
14-15	64-69	120-129	Superior
13	57-63	110-119	High Average
8-12	43-56	90-109	Average
6-7	37-42	80-89	Low Average
4-5	30-36	70-79	Borderline
<1-3	<20-29	<60-69	Impaired

The Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children, 5th Edition (WISC–V) is a comprehensive clinical instrument used for assessing overall intellectual functioning in children. The WISC-V was administered to Jack to help evaluate his intellectual ability as well as cognitive strengths and weaknesses. The WISC-V assesses intellectual functioning in five specified cognitive areas. These areas are presented as indices, which include the Verbal Comprehension Index (VCI), the Visual Spatial Index (VSI), the Fluid Reasoning Index (FRI), the Working Memory Index (WMI), and the Processing Speed Index (PSI). These indices are comprised of ten individual subtests (Similarities, Vocabulary, Block Design, Visual Puzzles, Matrix Reasoning, Figure Weights, Digit Span, Picture Span, Coding and Symbol Search). Lastly, seven subtests are combined to provide a composite score that represents one's overall intellectual ability, the Full Scale Intelligence Quotient (FSIQ). As there was a large difference between his highest (Digit Span-18) and lowest (Similarities, Coding-8) subtest scores, the FSIQ is not considered to be the most representative score of Jack's overall intelligence. Rather, Jack's individual index scores should be interpreted to better understand his cognitive strengths and weaknesses.

The Verbal Comprehension Index (VCI) measures verbal concept formation, verbal reasoning, and knowledge one has acquired from one's environment. Similarities and Vocabulary are the two subtests that comprise the VCI. Jack earned a standard score of 98, which falls within the Average range and is ranked at the 45th percentile. This indicates his verbal intellectual abilities are estimated to be equal to or higher than 45% of other children his age in the norming sample.

The Visual Spatial Index (VSI) measures a child's ability to evaluate visual spatial relationships to construct geometric designs from a model. Block Design and Visual Puzzles are the two subtests that comprise the VSI. Jack earned a standard score of 100, which falls within the Average range and is ranked at the 50th percentile. This indicates his visual spatial abilities are estimated to be equal to or higher than 50% of other children his age in the norming sample.

The Fluid Reasoning Index (FRI) measures one's ability to determine an underlying conceptual relationship among visual objects and use reasoning/logic to identify and apply rules. Identification and application of conceptual relationships in the FRI requires inductive and quantitative reasoning, broad visual intelligence, simultaneous processing, and abstract thinking.

The two subtests that make up the FRI are Matrix Reasoning and Figure Weights. On this index, Jack earned a standard score of 94, which falls within the Average range and is ranked at the 34th percentile. This indicates his verbal intellectual abilities are estimated to be equal to or higher than 34% of other children his age in the norming sample. Figure Weights was a personal weakness for Jack, indicating his quantitative reasoning skills are less well developed than other skills.

The Working Memory Index (WMI) provides a measure of the examinee's working memory abilities. Attention, concentration, mental control, and reasoning are all components involved in working memory. Tasks involving working memory require the ability to retain information in memory, perform some type of mental operation or manipulation, and then produce a result. Of note, modern research shows working memory is essential for higher order cognitive processes, such as planning, organization, and time-management (often referred to as "executive functions"). The core subtests for this section are Digit Span and Picture Span. On this index, Jack earned a WMI score of 146, which falls within the Extremely High range and is ranked at the 99.9 percentile. This indicates his working memory abilities are estimated to be equal to or higher than 99.9% of other children his age in the norming sample. Jack's WMI score indicates his ability to retain information and mental control is developing extraordinarily well.

Lastly, the Processing Speed Index (PSI) provides a measure of the examinee's ability to quickly and correctly scan, sequence, and discriminate simple visual information. The PSI also measures short-term visual memory, attention, and visual-motor coordination. The subtests that comprise the PSI include Coding and Symbol Search. On this measure, Jack earned a standard score of 95, which falls within the Average range and is ranked at the 37th percentile. This indicates his processing speed intellectual abilities are estimated to be equal to or higher than 37% of children his age in the norming sample.

The Wechsler Individual Achievement Test–Third Edition (WIAT–III) is an individually administered, diagnostic achievement test designed for students in grades Prekindergarten (PK) through 12, or ages 4 years, 0 months through 19 years, 11 months. The WIAT–III consists of 16 subtests used to evaluate listening, speaking, reading, writing, and mathematics skills. Jack was administered a subtest from the Oral Language Index as a measure of his receptive and expressive vocabulary abilities, as well as subtests from the Reading Index as a measure of basic skills such as reading fluency and reading comprehension.

The Listening Comprehension subtest contains two components: Receptive Vocabulary (which measures listening vocabulary) and Oral Discourse Comprehension (which measures the ability to make inferences about, and remember details from, oral sentences and discourse). On the Listening Comprehension subtest, Jack gave an Above Average performance with a standard score of 120. Jack's score is ranked at the 91st percentile, indicated his listening comprehension abilities are estimated to be equal to or higher than 91% of children his age in the norming sample.

On the Total Reading Index, Jack obtained a standard score of 116, which falls in the Above Average range and is ranked at the 86th percentile. This indicates Jack scored equal to or higher than 86% of individuals his age in the norming sample. The Total Reading index is comprised of the following subtests: Reading Comprehension, Word Reading, Pseudoword Decoding, and Oral Reading Fluency. On the Reading Comprehension subtest, Jack obtained a standard score of 104 which falls in the Average range and is ranked at the 61st percentile. On the Word Reading subtest, Jack obtained a standard score of 111 which falls in the Average range and is ranked at the 77th percentile. On the Pseudoword Decoding subtest, Jack obtained a standard score of 117 which falls in the Above Average range and is ranked at the 87th percentile. On the Oral Reading Fluency subtest, Jack obtained a standard score of 118 which falls in the Above Average range and is ranked at the 88th percentile. Jack's scores on the WIAT-III suggest his listening comprehension and reading skills are above expected for his age and grade-level. The examiner attempted to administer the writing and mathematics subtests, and Jack declined to complete those tasks.

The Beery-Buktenica Developmental Test of Visual-Motor Integration (Beery VMI) is a visual-motor test used to assess the ability to coordinate visual perception and fine motor (finger and hand) movements in children, adolescents, adults, and seniors, aged 2–100 years. The test is broken down into three sections. The first examines how efficiently the visual and motor systems are communicating with one another (the ability referred to as visual-motor integration), while the second and third isolate the visual perceptual and the motor control pieces of the puzzle. On the test of visual-motor integration, Jack performed in the Average range. On the Visual Perception test he scored in the Average range, and on the Motor Coordination test he scored in the Average range.

The Delis–Kaplan Executive Function System (D-KEFS) is a neuropsychological test used to measure a variety of verbal and nonverbal executive functions for both children and adults (ages 8–89 years). Select subtests were administered to Jack to measure attention and executive functioning abilities.

The Trail Making Test (from the D-KEFS) measures flexibility of thinking on a visual-motor sequencing task. On Condition 1: Visual Scanning, which measures basic visual scanning and visual attention, Jack performed in the High Average range. On Condition 2: Number Sequencing, which measures basic numerical processing and additional visual scanning/attentional abilities and motor functions, Jack performed in the High Average range. On Condition 3: Letter Sequencing, which assesses basic letter processing as well as visual scanning/attentional abilities and motor functions, Jack performed in the Average range. On Condition 4: Number-Letter Switching, which measures cognitive flexibility that is essential for higher-level skills such as multi-tasking, simultaneous processing, and divided attention, Jack performed in the Average range. Lastly, on Condition 5: Motor Speed, which measures basic motor functions in the dominant upper extremity, Jack performed in the Average range.

The Verbal Fluency Test (from the D-KEFS) measures letter fluency, category fluency, and category switching. On Condition 1: Letter Fluency, which measures phonemic language fluency (the ability to generate words that begin with a particular letter), Jack performed in the Average range. On Condition 2: Category Fluency, which measures semantic (categorical) fluency (the ability to generate words that belong to a particular category), Jack performed in the Borderline range. On Condition 3: Category Switching, which provides an additional measure of categorical fluency as well as cognitive flexibility, Jack performed in the Low Average range for Total Correct (the total number of accurate responses given) and in the Average range for Switching Accuracy (the total number of times he accurately switched between the different category sets).

The Tower Test (from the D-KEFS) measures spatial planning, rule learning, inhibition of impulsive and perseverative responding, and the ability to establish and maintain instructional set. On the Total Achievement index, which measures overall performance on this task, Jack performed in the Average range. On the Mean First-Move Time index, which measures the examinee's first-move times, Jack performed in the Average range. On the Time-Per-Move Ratio index, which measures the average time the examinee took to make each of their moves, Jack performed in the Average range. Lastly, on the Move Accuracy Ratio index, which measures the efficiency with which the examinee constructed the towers, Jack again performed in the Average range.

The Wide Range Assessment of Memory and Learning, Third Edition (WRAML-3) is an individually administered battery designed to assess various memory and working memory abilities in individuals ages 5-90. The examiner attempted to administer the WRAML-3 to Jack to obtain a detailed assessment of clinically relevant aspects of his memory functioning. However, this assessment was unable to be administered due to behavioral limitations presented during testing.

The Conners Continuous Performance Test, 3rd Edition (CPT-3) is a computerized measure that assesses lapses in attention and/or vigilance as well as impulsivity. On this measure, Jack produced a valid profile. His scores resulted in seven atypical T-scores, which is associated with a very high likelihood of having a disorder characterized by attention deficits. Relative to the normative sample, Jack was less able to differentiate targets from non-targets, made more commission errors, made more perseverative errors, responded more slowly, displayed less consistency in response speed, displayed more variability response speed, and displayed more of a reduction in response speed at longer ISIs. His scores indicate he may have issues related to inattentiveness, sustained attention, and vigilance.

The Behavior Assessment System for Children, 3rd Edition, Self-Report, Child (BASC-3 SRP-C) is a self-report questionnaire that assesses the mood and behavioral functioning of children ages 6-11. Jack endorsed BASC-3 items that resulted in one clinical elevation. A T-score of 72 on the Attitude to Teacher scale may indicate Jack viewed his teachers as unfair, uncaring, or overly demanding. Jack also scored in the at-risk range on several scales. His responses suggest he may dislike school, have trouble maintaining attention, and struggle with making and maintaining relationships with peers. Jack's scores also indicate he may view himself as "less than" other children his age, have difficulty getting along with his parents, and have low confidence in his ability to make decisions or solve problems. Following are Jack's responses to several critical items on the BASC-3 SRP-C: Sometimes I want to hurt myself (True), I feel safe at school (Never), I hear voices in my head that no one else can hear (Sometimes).

The Behavior Assessment System for Children, Third Edition, Parent Rating Scales, Child (BASC-3 PRS-C) is an assessment tool completed by a parent to describe a child's behavioral and social-emotional functioning between the ages of 6 and 11 years. Jack's father, Mr. Fouts, and his mother, Mrs. Fouts, each completed a form. Both of their reports scored Jack in the clinically elevated range on all the clinical scales. This suggests Mr. and Mrs. Fouts view Jack as struggling with a wide range of issues such as behavior problems, mood problems, attention, and socialization. Jack was also scored in the at-risk range for several of the adaptive scales, based on his mother's and father's reports. This suggests they may view Jack as having difficulty adapting to changes in his environment, struggling to communicate with others, and unable to complete simple daily tasks in a safe and efficient manner.

The Gilliam Autism Rating Scale-Third Edition (GARS-3) is a behavioral rating scale completed by caregivers. The six subscales composing the GARS-3 assess stereotyped behaviors (i.e., repetitive movements, eye contact, etc.), communication (i.e., repetitive language, delays in communication, etc.), and social interaction (i.e., a lack of social reciprocity, adherence to rituals and/or routines, etc.). Scores for each of these subscales are then combined to create the Autism Index. Information was gathered from Jack's mother, Lindsay Fouts, and Jack's father, John Fouts.

Mrs. Fouts' ratings resulted in an Autism Index score of 122, indicating a Very Likely probability Jack meets diagnostic criteria for Autism Spectrum Disorder. Mrs. Fouts reported Jack makes vocalizations for self-stimulation, displays ritualistic behaviors, pays little attention to what peers are doing, and has difficulty understanding when peers are ridiculing him. Mrs. Fouts also reported Jack becomes upset when routines are changed, talks about a single subject excessively, and repeats words or phrases.

Mr. Fouts' ratings resulted in an Autism Index Score of 122, indicating a Very Likely probability Jack meets diagnostic criteria for Autism Spectrum Disorder. Mr. Fouts reported Jack makes vocalizations for self-stimulation, displays ritualistic behavior, pays little attention to what peers are doing, displays little reciprocal social communication, and has difficulty understanding jokes. Mr. Fouts also reported Jack does not understand why others dislike him, responds negatively when given requests, shows an intense interest in a specific subject, and becomes upset when routines are changed.

The Adaptive Behavior Assessment System – Third Edition, Parent Form (ABAS-3) is a rating scale used to get a measure of adaptive skills. The ABAS-3 provides an estimate of an individual's functioning across three areas of adaptive behavior (Conceptual, Social and Practical), which combine to give an overall estimate of adaptive skills (General Adaptive Composite). Jack's mother and father both filled out a report. Their responses indicate Jack struggles with all areas of adaptive functioning. He likely has difficulty with communication, self-direction, engaging in leisure activities, staying safe, and engaging in self-care.

The Incomplete Sentence Blank (ISB) is a projective assessment of adjustment and personality. Jack completed 17 out of the 40 items and refused to complete the remainder of the sentences. Following are some notable examples of Jack's responses: My teachers were not people I trusted, Fathers get upset extremely easily, and My biggest problem is being shy with other kids.

SUMMARY & INTERPRETATION

Jack is an 11-year-old male who was referred for a psychological evaluation given concerns for attentional, cognitive, and social functioning.

Regarding the current results, Jack demonstrated intellectual abilities within the Average range with an Extremely High score on the Working Memory Index. On a measure of cognitive flexibility and visual scanning, he scored in the Average range. On a computerized measure of sustained attention, Jack produced seven atypical T-scores; his scores suggest he may have difficulties with inattentiveness, sustained attention, and vigilance. On self-report measures, Jack reported clinical levels of difficulty with inattentiveness. His parents rated Jack in the elevated range for symptoms of inattentiveness and hyperactivity and reported a longstanding history of difficulties in these domains, which, taken together, suggest Jack does qualify for a diagnosis of an Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder, Combined Type. Diagnostic features of ADHD identified by Jack's parents include acting without thinking, being overly active, interrupting others frequently, being unable to slow down, inability to wait for his turn, having a short attention span, and being easily distracted. Also, it is common in adolescents with ADHD to have difficulties regulating their emotions, including anger, a symptom Jack's parents identified as problematic for him.

Test data, parent-report, and assessor observation indicate Jack meets diagnostic criteria for Autism Spectrum Disorder, Level 2. Mrs. Fouts reported Jack makes vocalizations for self-stimulation, displays ritualistic behaviors, pays little attention to what peers are doing, has difficulty understanding when peers are ridiculing him, becomes upset when routines are changed, talks about a single subject excessively, and repeats words or phrases. Mr. Fouts reported Jack shows unusual interest in sensory aspects of materials, fails to imitate others, doesn't follow gestures, fails to predict probable consequences in social events, temper tantrums when frustrated, and displays superior knowledge in specific subjects. Jack's parents indicated Jack often avoids other children, almost always has trouble making new friends, and expresses emotions that do not fit the situation. In the clinical interview, Mr. Fouts stated Jack has a history of sensory integration problems, hypersensitivity to lights, sounds, and textures, periods of needing intense pressure or other forms of stimulation, struggles with reciprocal communication, does not show interest in the well-being of others, and has a history of lining his toys up, self-stimulating behavior, and visual fascination. During testing Jack was observed to be reticent about going with the examiner to the testing room without his parents. Once Jack became more comfortable, he was friendly and polite with the examiner until asked to do things he did not want to do. When responding to the examiner, Jack would look at the table, testing materials, or around the room rather than making eye contact. Jack was able to discuss bullying behavior by children in his class, but he was not able to describe why they do this. Jack asked the examiner, "Will you be my friend?" displaying a naïve and simplistic understanding of friendship. Jack appears to need "substantial support", indicating a Level 2 severity designation.

DIAGNOSTIC IMPRESSIONS

Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder, Combined Presentation (F90.2)

METHODS OF CURRENT TREATMENT

Ms. Lindsey Smith, LPCC, LPATA for individual therapy at Seven Counties Services and Ms. Theresa Adamchik, ATR-BC, LPAT, LPCC-S for art therapy at Louisville Expressive Therapies. He takes medication as prescribed.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The following recommendations are offered to aid in Jack's treatment:

ADHD

1.) It is recommended Jack continue to meet with a medication prescriber to ensure the medication is continuing to be helpful in managing his symptoms of ADHD and to optimize his behavioral functioning.

2.) Jack may benefit from attending a therapy group for adolescents with ADHD. An example of a local group can be found at http://www.dimensionsfamilytherapy.com/brochures/ADHD_Brochure.pdf.

3.) In addition, Jack should receive academic accommodations as part of a 504 plan or an Individualized Education Plan (IEP) for help with ADHD, Autism Spectrum Disorder, and Average Intellectual Functioning. Such accommodations should include, but not be limited to:

- Give Jack extended time on tests (e.g., time and a half). Jack struggles to demonstrate his knowledge as quickly as other individuals his age, and thus will need more time to do so. When appropriate, he should be allowed time and a half during tests.

- Work out a system for regular reports if he returns to a traditional classroom. It might be wise to monitor how things are going in the classroom, but that can leave parents walking a fine line between under- and over-involvement, particularly when Jack is older. Thus, try to work out a system in advance when possible. While it is not wise to be a 'helicopter parent' and completely monitor everything that's going on, setting up a routine, behavior management plans, and having regular parent-teacher communication can help keep kids on track at school.

- Help Jack get organized. Organizational skills are a problem for a lot of people, but they're an even bigger stumbling block for those with ADHD. Experiment at home to find out the best way to keep Jack organized and accountable. For example, try using checklists or charts, and collaborate with teachers to translate that system into the school setting.

- Focus on the physical environment. Where Jack sits in the classroom can be a make-or-break detail in the ADHD student's school experience. There are ways to place children/adolescents in a classroom so their physical environment allows them to pay better attention. If Jack is struggling in a particular class, he may need to be at the front, or maybe some other arrangement where he is close to the teacher.

- Avoid Average Intellectual Functioning/ADHD/Autism Spectrum Disorder stigmas. As is the case with many psychiatric diagnoses, being classified as having ADHD and Autism Spectrum Disorder can have a stigmatizing effect. Try to keep Jack's diagnoses between the teacher and himself. Jack's teachers, for instance, might use a code word to help remind him to focus. It is also important for Jack's teachers to know he may require additional repetition of instructions and/or further explanation.

Autism Spectrum Disorder

4.) Jack's parents may find it helpful to learn more about the symptoms and treatments of Autism Spectrum Disorder. The following is a good resource for information: https://www.nimh.nih.gov/health/publications/autism-spectrum-disorder.

5.) Mr. and Mrs. Fouts may find it beneficial to reach out to BlueSprig in Georgetown, Kentucky. This practice offers ABA services and may be able to provide them with additional local resources to assist Jack. The website for this practice is: https://www.bluesprigautism.com/bluesprig-georgetown/?utm_source=google&utm_medium=local&utm_campaign=bs_georgetown.

Additional Recommendations

6.) Jack's hard work and determination, as well as his many strengths, should be acknowledged. This will be critical not only in facilitating academic progress, but also in maintaining his self-esteem.

7.) It is recommended Jack continue individual therapy and art therapy to develop skills to help him effectively manage symptoms of inattentiveness, hyperactivity, and impulsivity. Therapy will also aid Jack in managing his symptoms of social stress and anxiety as well as help him develop emotional and behavioral regulation skills.

8.) It is recommended Jack engage in regular self-care activities that bring him enjoyment. Regular physical activity/exercise is healthy for the brain as well as the body.

9.) It is recommended Jack ensure proper daily water intake, ensure proper sleep hygiene, and ensure proper daily nutrition to optimize his emotional functioning.

10.) Lastly, this evaluation may be used as a baseline in comparison to future evaluations.

Fouts, Jack

Disease Overview

Gastroparesis (abbreviated as GP) represents a clinical syndrome characterized by sluggish emptying of solid food (and more rarely, liquid nutrients) from the stomach, which causes persistent digestive symptoms especially nausea and primarily affects young to middle-aged women, but is also known to affect younger children and males. Diagnosis is made based upon a radiographic gastric emptying test. Diabetics and those acquiring gastroparesis for unknown (or, idiopathic) causes represent the two largest groups of gastroparetic patients; however, numerous etiologies (both rare and common) can lead to a gastroparesis syndrome.

Gastroparesis is also known as delayed gastric emptying and is an old term that does not adequately describe all the motor impairments that may occur within the gastroparetic stomach. Furthermore, there is no expert agreement on the use of the term, gastroparesis. Some specialists will reserve the term, gastroparesis, for grossly impaired emptying of the stomach while retaining the label of delayed gastric emptying, or functional dyspepsia (non-ulcer dyspepsia), for less pronounced evidence of impaired emptying. These terms are all very subjective. There is no scientific basis by which to separate functional dyspepsia from classical gastroparesis except by symptom intensity. In both conditions, there is significant overlap in treatment, symptomatology and underlying physiological disturbances of stomach function.

For the most part, the finding of delayed emptying (gastric stasis) provides a “marker” for a gastric motility problem. Regardless, the symptoms generated by the stomach dysmotility greatly impair quality of life for the vast majority of patients and disable about 1 in 10 patients with the conditi

While delayed emptying of the stomach is the clinical feature of gastroparesis, the relationship between the degree of delay in emptying and the intensity of digestive symptoms does not always match. For instance, some diabetics may exhibit pronounced gastric stasis yet suffer very little from the classical gastroparetic symptoms of: nausea, vomiting, reflux, abdominal pain, bloating, fullness, and loss of appetite. Rather, erratic blood-glucose control and life-threatening hypoglycemic episodes may be the only indication of diabetic gastroparesis. In another subset of patients (diabetic and non-diabetic) who suffer from disabling nausea that is to the degree that their ability to eat, sleep or carry out activities of daily living is disrupted gastric emptying may be normal, near normal, or intermittently delayed. In such cases, a gastric neuro-electrical dysfunction, or gastric dysrhythmia (commonly found associated with gastroparesis syndrome), may be at fault.

Therefore, these disorders of functional dyspepsia, gastric dysrhythms, and gastroparesis are all descriptive labels sharing similar symptoms and perhaps representing a similar entity of disordered gastric neuromuscular function. For this reason, a more encompassing term, gastropathy, can be used interchangeably with gastroparesis.

Signs & Symptoms

The digestive symptom profile of nausea, vomiting, abdominal pain, reflux, bloating, a feeling of fullness after a few bites of food (early satiety), and anorexia can vary in patients both in combination and severity. A small percentage of patients who live with poorly managed symptoms despite numerous treatment interventions, and an inability to meet their nutritional needs represent the extreme end of the gastroparesis spectrum of gastric failure. For most, the prevailing symptom experience is persistent nausea that often intensifies a few hours after eating. Nausea may become so intense as to trigger vomiting even after a few sips of water. Vomiting, also commonly reported, typically starts a couple of hours after eating so that the food is still recognizable and undigested. Chronic abdominal pain, which may also occur, is felt to result from visceral neuropathy. The pain, often diffuse, is described as burning, shearing or gnawing in character. The nature of pain may also be complex with some individuals experiencing acute pain, trigged by eating, layered on top of the chronic pain. This acute, sharp pain may be related to intestinal cramping and/or to spasms in the upper portion of the stomach caused by its failure to relax and "accommodate" the just-eaten food. As well, a gall bladder that is sluggish to empty (paresis) is commonly found in association with a poorly emptying stomach. This may all add to the pain experienced soon after eating. A poorly emptying stomach additionally predisposes patients to regurgitation of solid food, as well as gastric esophageal reflux disease (GERD). The reflux may range from mild through to severe. GERD complications can create esophageal spasm (also called non-cardiac chest pain) and can add to the burden of chronic pain. In severe cases, reflux aspiration pneumonitis compounds the clinical picture.

Other symptoms include belching and bloating-again, developing soon after meal ingestion and lasting for hours-along with visible abdominal distention. The distention and bloating may push up against the diaphragm making breathing uncomfortable. Loss of appetite (anorexia), a conscious avoidance of food in an attempt to moderate digestive symptoms, or food craving that are all frequently reported as well.

Vomiting, which can result in the life-threatening conditions of dehydration and electrolyte imbalances, represents the most troubling of all the digestive symptoms related to gastroparesis. Repeated vomiting usually necessitates a visit to the emergency room. Concomitant spiraling malnourishment accompanies frequent, chronic vomiting and precipitates repeated and prolonged hospital admissions. Approximately 5 to 10% of insulin-dependent diabetics may progress to severe symptomatic gastroparesis.

In the majority of insulin-dependent diabetics, gastroparesis is often overlooked and under-diagnosed, especially in its early stages. The characteristics of poor glucose control and acid reflux are often the only signatures of delayed gastric emptying. The typical picture seen in the diabetic gastroparetic stomach is low blood-glucose levels at bedtime with very high blood-glucose levels by the next morning. This situation is interspersed with days of good blood-sugar control. Some scientific studies have found diabetic gastroparesis to correlate with autonomic neuropathy (diabetic autonomic neuropathy, or DAN and cardiac autonomic neuropathy, or CAN), but not with the duration of diabetes, metabolic control or other chronic complications. It is to be noted that acute hyperglycemia profoundly retards gastric emptying.

If DAN is present, then regaining control of blood glucose can be enormously challenging. For Type 2 diabetics (non-insulin dependent), absorption of oral hypoglycemic agents may be very unpredictable due to the delayed gastric emptying.

Gastroparetic symptoms in most patients show either a pattern of cycling with flare-ups, or daily occurrences persisting for years.

Causes

The etiologies (causes) for gastroparesis are extensive and varied. Reports from one tertiary referral center found that out of their 146 patients with gastroparesis: 36% were idiopathic (unknown causes), 29% were diabetic, 13% were post-surgical, 7.5% had Parkinson's disease and 4.8% had collagen diseases. Any disease of metabolic, neurological (psychiatric, brainstem, autonomic including sympathetic and parasympathetic or enteric), or connective tissue (autoimmune) origin has the potential to disrupt gastric neural circuitry. Regional areas of the stomach may show various degrees of dysfunction, such as: failure of fundic relaxation, weakened postprandial antral contractions, pylorospasm, and / or gastric hyperalgesia; yet, rarely is gastroparesis restricted exclusively to the stomach. If perturbation of stomach function occurs, this will indirectly impact function in many other regions along the GI tract due to the complex enteric reflexes and neuronal relays which exist throughout the gastrointestinal (GI) system. The ability of the GI track to "cross-talk" is essential for coordination of normal digestion. Gastroparesis then is a complex, multifactor, chronic, digestive disease state with possible genetic, physiological, immune, psychological, social and environmental interplays.

Gastroparesis has been documented to occur as a sequel to viral gastroenteritis, slowly resolving over one to two years. However, any upper-gut infection of bacterial, parasitic or viral origin has the potential to disrupt, for prolonged periods of time, gastric motility. In gastroparesis patients, and others with unexplained chronic nausea and vomiting, one recent study reported up to 80% of 121 patients were found to have structural abnormalities of enteric nerves on full-thickness tissue biopsies of the duodenum.

Examples of gastroparesis include insulin-dependent diabetes, post-vagotomy (surgical), anorexia nervosa and bulimia, chronic liver or renal failure, and chronic pancreatitis. Gastroparesis may also be induced by medications, or associated with total parenteral nutrition or related to bone marrow and other organ transplants. Additional causes include paraneoplastic syndrome, mitochondrial disorders, abnormal gastric pacemaker activity (gastric dysrhythmias), visceral neuropathies, (for example: Guillain-Barre syndrome) and visceral myopathies (for example: systemic scleroderma)

[For more information on any of the listed disorders, choose the specific name as your search term in the Rare Disease Database.]

A great deal of research into the enteric nervous system has begun to identify specific cellular and neuronal abnormalities associated in gastroparesis such as:

+ Loss of ICC (interstitial cells of Cajal)*

+ Loss of neuronal nitric oxide synthase (nNOS)

+ Enteric neuronal degeneration (visceral neuropathy)

+ Smooth muscle disease (myopathy), often related to collagen diseases

*Interstitial cells of Cajal (ICC) are critical components for GI motility. Various types of ICCs have been identified. They are involved in the generation and propagation of electrical rhythmic activity (hence, they are known as the "pacemaker" cells) and serve as well to bridge communication, and amplify the signals from neuronal inputs to mechanical smooth muscle action (transduction).

So far, there is no consensus on how to classify histopathological findings.

Other significant serological abnormalities have been documented in diabetic, post-surgical and idiopathic cases of gastroparesis. In one case study a high prevalence (89%) of acquired and congenital hypercoagulable defects was documented, which would predispose patients to arterial and venous clots. Coagulation evaluation would then be prudent in patients with severe gastroparesis, especially in high-risk thrombophilic situations such as hospitalization, prolonged intravenous access, and surgery.

Affected populations

Gastroparesis demonstrates a gender bias affecting more women than men. Approximately 80% of idiopathic cases are women. Idiopathic gastroparesis may be linked to an as yet-to-be-elucidated enteric autoimmune disease. The prevalence of delayed gastric emptying in Type 1 diabetics has been reported to be 50% and in type 2 diabetics, reports range from 30% to 50%. Post surgical gastroparesis is a recognized as inadvertent vagal nerve damage or entrapment following upper abdominal surgery, examples are: fundoplication for the treatment of GERD, bariatric surgery, peptic ulcer surgery, anterior approach for spinal surgery (scoliosis), heart, lung transplant, or pancreatic surgery.

Disorders with Similar Symptoms

A stomach motor disturbance known as "dumping syndrome" whereby food or liquids empty too quickly from the stomach can present with similar symptoms as are found in gastroparesis. Othe disorders that may clinically present as gastroparesis (gastritis, gastric ulcers, pyloric stenosis, ce.

disease, and GI obstructions) need to be ruled out.

Diagnosis

A diagnosis of gastroparesis is made based upon a thorough clinical evaluation, a detailed patient history, and a variety of specialized tests. Tests may first be performed to rule out other causes of delayed gastric emptying such as obstruction of the gastrointestinal tract. Additional tests are then performed to confirm a diagnosis of gastroparesis.

Tests to rule out other causes of delayed gastric emptying include routine blood tests, an upper gastrointestinal endoscopy, a barium gastrointestinal series with small-bowel-follow-through, and an abdominal ultrasound. During an upper GI endoscopy, a thin, flexible tube (endoscope) is run down the throat to the stomach and the small intestines. The tube has a tiny camera attached to it that allows a physician to search for abnormalities and obstructions within the gastrointestinal tract. During an ultrasound, reflected sound waves create an image of the abdomen.

An upper endosocpic procedure may lead to a serendipitous diagnosis of gastroparesis through the discovery of identifiable food within the stomach after the pre-procedure overnight fast.

The radionuclide (scintigraphy) solid-phase gastric emptying test (GET), the gold standard for diagnosing gastroparesis, can now be measured using only four images: baseline, 1-hour, 2-hour, and 4-hour. The GET, a non-invasive test, is widely available and accessible. The test involves eating food that contains a small amount of radioactive material (radioisotope). This tiny dose of radiation can be seen on a gamma camera (much like an X-ray machine), but is not dangerous. The scans allow a physician to determine the rate at which food leaves the stomach. Many other methods are now being employed to track gastric emptying times; for instance a gastric breath test (not in common use in North America) and a new encapsulated recording device, called SmartPill has the ability to measure gastric pH, GI luminal pressures, and determine gastric and intestinal transit time.

Other diagnostic tests for GP can include electrogastrography (EGG). This is often referred to as the EKG of the stomach. EGG can serve as a screening tool and is complementary to the gastric emptying test. The EGG is capable of detecting specific gastric electrical rhythm abnormalities and indirectly gives an indication of the integrity of the stomach's ICC network. This test is generally done using a non-invasive method with cutaneous (skin) leads. A less common method of administering an EGG is a direct, invasive means via mucosa (either during endoscopy or serosa recordings can be done at the time of gastric electrical stimulation placement for the treatment of nausea and vomiting).

Many patients with symptoms of gastroparesis often have related nutritional deficiencies and disorders. Nutritional laboratory measurements are important. Laboratory tests to include are albumin, pre-albumin, hemoglobin A1C (on all diabetic patients), ferritin, B-12, and 25-hydroxy vitamin D.

Standard Therapies

Treatment

Treating the underlying cause of gastroparesis (such as tightening up blood glucose control in diabetes) is usually the first step in treating individuals with gastroparesis. The specific therapeutic techniques used depend upon several factors, including the severity of the disorder. Therapies that are used to treat individuals with gastroparesis include non-pharmacological steps, dietary modification, medications that stimulate gastric emptying (prokinetics), medications that reduce vomiting (antiemetics), medications for controlling pain and intestinal spasms, and surgery.

Some researchers have proposed a classification system to help determine appropriate treatment options. Grade 1, or mild gastroparesis, is characterized by symptoms that come and go and can easily be controlled by dietary modification and by avoiding medications that slow gastric emptying. Grade 2, or compensated gastroparesis, is characterized by moderately severe symptoms. Individuals with Grade 2 gastroparesis are treated with medications that stimulate gastric emptying and medications that reduce vomiting; such individuals require hospitalization only infrequently. Grade 3, or gastric failure, is characterized by individuals who do not respond to medications used to treat gastroparesis. These individuals cannot maintain proper nutrition or hydration. Required therapies may include intravenous fluids and medications and nutrition, or surgery. Individuals with Grade 3 gastroparesis often require hospitalization.

Non-pharmacological interventions include: liquid vitamin supplements (including optimal levels of vitamin D), discontinuation of smoking and alcohol use, learning techniques of deep relaxation, the use of acupuncture or acupoint stimulation, and reviewing all medications and supplements with a pharmacist to insure current regimen is not contributing to delayed gastric emptying. Other non-pharmacological therapies for GP include autonomic retraining; often related to autogenic feedback training developed by NASA for space motion sickness, autonomic retraining has shown promise in selected patients.

Dietary changes include eating five to six small meals each day and avoiding high-insoluble fiber and high-fat foods, both of which can slow down stomach emptying. Lactose intolerance is common in gastroparesis, so avoidance of dairy is helpful, but fermented milk (yogurt) is fine. Some individuals do better with liquid or pureed foods while avoiding difficult-to-digest solid foods. Liquid nutritional supplements are also an excellent source of additional calories and proteins to make up for nutritional deficiencies resulting from a poor appetite.

Medications that stimulate gastric emptying are called prokinetics. They are the primary treatment for individuals with gastroparesis. First-line medical treatment begins with the dopamine blockers. Of the two drugs, metoclopromide (Reglan) and domperidone (Motilitum), domperidone has a much better safety profile. Metoclopromide has serious neurological side effects, including irreversible tardiv dyskinesia. Domperidone is now available in the United States through the FDA's Investigationa

Drug protocol. Next are the motilin agonists, such as erythromycin. Unfortunately, motilin agonists have a number of potential drug interactions and lose effectiveness over time. Cholinergic agonists, either direct-acting or via 5HT receptors, such as bethanecol (Urecholine) and cisapride (Propulsid), have been limited by the side-effect profile (especially, in the case of cisapride, for possible drug interactions) or are not used widely. Tegaserod is no longer available for the treatment of gastroparesis.

The most common symptom of gastroparesis is nausea and it can be enormously challenging to control. Often, medications used to reduce nausea and vomiting “antiemetics” are used in combinations and in conjunction with prokinetics. Common antiemetics used are prochlorperazine (Compazine), promethazine (Phenergan), and ondansetron (Zofran).

Abdominal pain is best managed by a pain specialty clinic where a selection of analgesics with the least impact on slowing the GI tract can be made.

Keeping a good bowel routine and avoiding constipation helps in the management of upper digestive symptoms of gastroparesis.

Other clinical management issues to consider are metabolic bone disease (all gastroparetic patients are at risk) and routine monitoring for small bowel bacterial overgrowth (SBBO). SBBO commonly occurs in gastroparesis and may greatly contribute to upper digestive symptoms, malnutrition and vitamin deficiencies. Antibiotics and perhaps probiotics help to keep SBBO in check.

Bezoars (congealed food residue left in the stomach) are a rare occurrence in gastroparesis but are found in more severe cases of gastric stasis. Whenever a patient’s usual pattern of nausea and vomiting rises to a new intensity, then suspicion of a bezoar should be investigated via endoscopy.

Individuals with severe gastroparesis, or those who do not respond to medications, may require enteral or parenteral feeding to compensate for nutritional deficiencies and to prevent dehydration. Enteral feeding refers to a feeding tube that transverses from the skin and comes to rest directly in either the stomach (G-tube) or small intestine (J-tube, for jejeunal) or a G-J tube (a tube that enters the stomach and transverses the pylorus to enter the small intestine). Feeding tubes are generally needed for long durations (> 3 months) and selection of a tube should be made with this in mind.

Parenteral feeding refers to the implantation of a small, thin tube (catheter) into a vein so that nutrients and fluids can be delivered directly into the bloodstream.

Enteral Tubes for GP Patients

Enteral tubes are often not successful for feeding (due to slow infusion rates related to stomach and small bowel dysmotilities) but may be helpful as a conduit for free water or medications. In fact, medications are more evenly absorbed when administered via enteral tubes. For diabetics, impro blood glucose can be achieved when nutrients bypass the gastroparetic stomach and are then absorbed in a more predictable way for matching insulin needs.

Additionally, enteral tubes-either gastric or small intestinal may be useful as venting, particularly for patients with localized dilated segments of small bowel or stomach (watermelon stomach) commonly the result of visceral myopathies.

Finally, small bowel bacterial overgrowth may be treated more successfully if antibiotics can be given by tube, especially if the patient suffers from vomiting.

IV Access for Gastroparesis

Intravenous access may be a life-saving delivery of medication and nutrition for some severely affected patients. However, IV access may also be life-threatening due to infection and/or thrombosis. Recent work has revealed that many GP patients are hypercoagulable and in some centers, all GP patients who receive IV access also undergo a hypercoagulable evaluation. Those that are at highest risk for thrombosis are then usually started on anticoagulation. Gastroparesis, itself, may pose special problems for anticoagulation, as absorption of oral anticoagulants may be erratic. A good short-term plan is to use sub-cutaneous, low molecular-weight heparin, at least until nausea and vomiting can be controlled.

Surgical Interventions for Gastroparesis

Surgical interventions for palliation of symptoms of severe diabetic and idiopathic gastroparesis such as: pyloroplasty, or elimination of the stomach through near total gastrectomy (Billroth I, Antrectomy, Roux-En-Y); show little improvement in symptom management. A review of the literature by Reardon et al, showed that of 12 patients, only 3 had resolution of their symptoms, with the majority having no improvement or only temporary improvements, or a worsening of symptoms to include bilious vomiting.

Experts agree that the entire stomach is affected in severe gastroparesis; therefore, treatment by partial gastrectomy is unsatisfactory as a method to attempt to ameliorate symptoms. Treatment by total gastrectomy is used as a palliative measure; however, it is a major surgical procedure which carries risks. This procedure has significant morbidity, and a mortality rate of 3.5%. Also, once the stomach is removed, the option no longer exists to take advantage of any new pharmacological therapies that may come along; and dependency on enteral / parenteral nutrition is permanent. Also, nausea remains a very troubling symptom even after total gastrectomy.

Clinical Trials and Studies

Researchers have been studying the use of a procedure known as gastric electrical stimulation (GES) for the treatment of individuals with gastroparesis. In 2000, the U.S. Food and Drug Administrat (FDA) approved the use of Enterra Therapy System (GES) under the "humanitarian device exemption" for the treatment of diabetic and idiopathic gastroparesis. This special regulatory category was created for devices that would benefit fewer than 3,000 individuals. The FDA restricts its use to medical centers with an Institutional Review Board (IRB). The Enterra Therapy System is manufactured by Medtronic (www.medtronic.com). To date, approximately 7,000 patients have been implanted with GES.

The use of GES in diabetics has a high rate of success for reducing symptoms of nausea and vomiting. However, success in the idiopathic patients is less predictable. Therefore, following the clinical practice for other neurostimulating devices (examples: spinal cord stimulation, sacral nerve stimulation, deep brain stimulation) whereby a short-term trial of stimulation is used to help identify "responders" to therapy prior to permanent surgical placement; it is possible to conduct a short-term trial of GES to help identify who will benefit from this procedure.

Temporary GES is carried out via the use of endoscopy. Under direct visualization, one wire lead in secured into the stomach, mucosal wall. The wire exits from one side of the nose (nostril) and is connected to the pulse generator (box) which is secured on the outside of the body. A minimum 3 day trail helps determine if the individual patient will benefit from GES.

In permanent GES a tiny pulse generator and two wire leads with small electrode ends are implanted in the stomach. Similar to a cardiac pacemaker, the generator delivers a series of electrical pulses. Initial studies have shown that GES causes a reduction in nausea and vomiting in individuals with gastroparesis. Additional positive effects of GES include improvement in GI symptoms, gastric emptying, and pancreatic function. Improved autonomic and enteric nervous system function and quality of life, as well as reduction in hospitalizations and medical care costs, and improvements in survival have also been shown. GES has been used for individuals with diabetic and idiopathic gastroparesis as well as for individuals who have not responded to other therapies.

The nutritional effects of GES are related primarily to decreased GI symptoms and are accompanied by increased weight and body mass index, increased albumin, an improvement in pancreatic function, and a decreased need for parenteral nutrition and enteral tubes. Decreased costs and improved quality of life, discussed above, are undoubtedly related to the improvements in GI and nutritional status. Finally, GES is a reversible procedure and carries no mortality risk.

Botulinum toxin is a protein that is toxic to nerves. It is best known as a cosmetic therapy that temporarily eliminates the wrinkles of aging. Some researchers have used botulinum toxin to treat individuals with gastroparesis. Through the use of a thin, flexible tube (endoscope), botulinum toxin is injected directly into the pyloric muscle, which controls how much food passes from the stomach into the small intestines. Botulinum toxin relaxes the pyloric muscle allowing a greater amount food to pass into the small intestines. The effects of botulinum toxin are temporary (generally three to nine months). Research studies have shown mixed results for providing improvement in symptoms for gastroparetic patients. More research is necessary to determine the long-term safety and effectiveness of this potential therapy for individuals with gastroparesis.

A new class of drugs, called ghrenlin receptor agonist, are currently proceeding through clinical trials in the treatment of diabetics with gastroparesis. These orally administered, promotility drugs are showing promise.

Information on current clinical trials is posted on the Internet at www.clinicaltrials.gov. All studies receiving U.S. Government funding, and some supported by private industry, are posted on this government web site.

REPORT OF AUDITORY EVALUATION:
Central Auditory Processing Assessment

Patient Name: Jack Fouts
Date of Birth: April 26, 2011
Age: 10 years, 8 months
Dates of Evaluation: February 8, 2022

Jack is a 10-year-old male seen at Beyond The Ear on the above date for a comprehensive audiological assessment, including an auditory processing evaluation. Today's central test battery that was administered included Competing Sentences, Low Pass Filtered Words (LPFW), Dichotic Digits (DD), Staggered Spondaic Words (SSW), Frequency Patterns Test (FPT), Speech in Noise (W-22 words), Phonemic Synthesis Test (PST) and the Gaps in Noise Test (GIN). Additionally, the CELF-4 Language Screening, the auditory memory portion of the Test of Auditory Processing Skills (TAPS-3), and the Test of Word Reading Efficiency (TOWRE) were given. Jack was cooperative and well-mannered throughout the testing; he was conscientious, and he put forth good effort. He was noted to need more time to respond than typical. The major diagnostic objective today was the assessment of auditory processing abilities.

HISTORY
According to parental report, Jack was the product of a normal pregnancy and delivery. No neonatal risk factors for hearing loss were reported. His early developmental milestones were all obtained within normal limits, except for his speech-language acquisition, which was described as late. Tinnitus (ringing in the ears) and dizziness were reported as happening occasionally; hyperacusis (sensitivity to loud sounds) along with sensitivity to other sensory inputs, such as textures and light, were reported. Jack has a history of middle ear disorder requiring the placement of pressure equalization tubes; he also had adenoidectomy around the age of 4. Jack has been diagnosed with sensory integration disorder, Oppositional Defiant Disorder, ADHD, Cluster headaches, and gastroparesis. Father reported that Jack has been experiencing increased anxiety lately, particularly as it relates to school.

As mentioned, Jack's speech-language skills were delayed. Jack received speech therapy and occupational therapy through First Steps. He then transitioned to private therapy once he turned 3. He has not had any speech or occupational therapies recently.

Father has concerns regarding Jack's communication and listening skills. He has trouble following directions; he does not listen well. He has a hard time telling a story or expressing what happened in a story that was just read to him. Father is unsure if he is not processing well or if he is not paying attention. He often will give inappropriate responses to questions.

Jack has had several behavioral/psychoeducational evaluations. Father reported that Jack was evaluated twice by the Weisskopf Center around the ages of 4 and 6. He was also evaluated by Strong Minds when he was aged 3. Jack has above average intelligence but difficulty with attention, executive functioning, emotional lability, and possible processing weaknesses. Father indicated that Jack has many tendencies that are similar to someone with Autism Spectrum Disorder, but this diagnosis has not been rendered.

Jack is in the 5th grade at Bloom Elementary School. He was described by his father as being a very bright youth who struggles in school due to what father perceives as some sort of processing issue. He gets mostly good grades, but he often misses things and/or feels overwhelmed. He has difficulty following oral directions. Jack likes school generally, but his anxiety is increasing regarding going to school. He does not have friends there, and father reported that Jack has experienced some bullying. Jack has a 504 plan in place but indicated that it is not always being followed; father is considering homeschooling. Father was asked to rate Jack in various academic subjects. He rated Jack's oral reading, reading comprehension, written language, handwriting, performance on spelling tests, and performance on math calculations as good, and his performance on math word problems and ability to follow oral directions as fair.

On a list of characteristics of language processing disorders, several traits were reported as characterizing Jack. Father indicated that Jack has difficulty retrieving common words (or difficulty with naming), makes up words when he can't think of the right word, frequent "mazing" or circumlocution when speaking, has response latency (or uses fillers like "uh", "well, etc.) when asked questions at times, difficulty organizing his thoughts, misuse of similar sounding words, and makes language errors when speaking. Father said he has to be careful when correcting Jack because Jack is very sensitive.

On a list of behaviors that can be characteristic of children with auditory processing disorders, parental report indicated that Jack says "what" or "huh" often, misunderstands similarly sounding words, has difficulty listening in background noise, frequently asks for repetition, has difficulty locating sounds, has difficulty following oral directions, has difficulty paying attention, is restless, impulsive, forgetful, easily distracted, disorganized, has difficulty taking notes in class, and can become easily frustrated.

TEST RESULTS

Pure tone audiometry revealed hearing sensitivity to be within normal limits bilaterally. Tympanometry showed results consistent with normal middle ear function bilaterally. Speech recognition thresholds (SRTs) were within normal limits (10 dBHL for the right ear and 15 dBHL for the left ear) bilaterally. Word recognition scores using W-22 words, presented in quiet at a comfortable level, were 92% for both ears.

The central test battery was administered at 50 dBSL re: SRT, unless otherwise noted, via insert earphones. The results are as follows:

Competing Sentences (administered at +50/+35 dBSL)

This dichotic test evaluates the ability to listen to one message and ignore another. It assesses development of the central auditory process of Binaural Separation. Different sentences are presented to each ear at the same time. The target sentence is presented at 15dB less (softer) than the competing sentence in the opposite ear. The child is asked to ignore one sentence and repeat the other. A score of 90% or better in the right ear and 88% or better in the left ear is within normal limits for Jack's age. Jack's scores were within normal limits bilaterally.

LPFW

This test evaluates how well a listener can understand distorted speech, assessing the development of auditory closure. Jack was asked to repeat words that have been digitally filtered at 500 Hz, making them sound muffled. Scores within normal limits are 66% or better for a 10-year-old. Jack's scores were below normal limits for both ears.

DD

The Dichotic Digits test evaluates how well the listener processes auditory information when it is presented in competition between the two ears (binaural integration). Numbers are presented simultaneously to both ears in pairs of two digits (i.e., 4 & 1, 6 & 8). He was asked to repeat the digits after each double pair was presented. Performance for a 10-year-old is 85% or better for the right ear and 78% or better for the left ear. Jack's scores were within normal limits bilaterally.

SSW
This task required Jack to repeat two compound words, which were presented with the second syllable of the first word and the first syllable of the second word coinciding. This task is like the dichotic digits task. Error scores are calculated for four conditions: right non-competing (RNC), right competing (RC), left competing (LC), and left non-competing (LNC). Jack's error scores were within normal limits for all conditions.

FPT
The Frequency Pattern Test, which is a test of auditory temporal sequencing, required that Jack correctly identify a series of three tones that varied in pitch (either high or low pitch). Jack was asked to reply both verbally and non-verbally. Performance for his age group is 70% or better. Jack's performance was within normal limits for both conditions.

Verbal Response: 87%
Non-verbal (hum): 100%

Speech in Noise (W-22 words with speech noise +5 dB SNR)
This test measures the auditory processing skill of Auditory Figure-Ground, which is the ability to understand words in an adverse listening environment. Jack was required to listen to words presented in the presence of background noise. The words were 5 dB louder than the noise, and each ear was tested separately. A percent correct score is obtained and then a difference score (performance in quiet vs. noise) is calculated. For Jack's age group, a difference score of 20% or less is normal. Jack's performance showed a moderate difficulty listening in background noise in the right ear and normal performance in the left ear with difference scores of 32% and 20% for the right and left ears, respectively.

PST
This test required Jack to repeat words that were presented as a string of individual sounds (i.e., each: /ee/ -- /ch/). It is a measure of phonological awareness, specifically phonemic blending with no visual cues. Normal performance for Jack's age is ≥21 correct out of 25. Jack's score was below normal limits at 20 correct. The below normal performance is more likely due to the memory load of this task than a true phonological awareness issue.

GIN
This test is a measure of temporal processing, specifically temporal resolution. The listener is asked to press a button every time he/she hears a "gap" or pause in the noise. On the screening version, which was given to Jack, there are 12 bursts of noise with 1, 2, or 3 gaps of varying duration from 4 and 8 milliseconds (ms) long. Average gap detection is around 5.5 ms. Jack's performance was within normal limits at 5 ms for both ears.

TAPS-3
Portions of this test were given to evaluate Jack's higher order auditory memory skills with visual cues. The child is asked to recall simple sequences of auditory information. These tasks were completed face-to-face outside of the sound booth. Three subtests were given: Number Memory Forward, Word Memory and Sentence Memory. Jack's performance declined as the materials became more linguistically loaded. The scores are as follows:

SUBTEST	Percentile	Interpretation
Number Memory Forward:	95th	Superior
Word Memory:	63rd	Average
Sentence Memory:	25th	Low Average

CELF-4
This test is utilized as a screening of receptive and expressive language skills to determine if further in-depth evaluation would be useful. A passing score for Jack's age is 18 or more. Jack passed the screening with a score of 24.

TOWRE
This test evaluates the ability to read sight words and nonsense words aloud in a specified time frame (45 seconds). This test was given face-to-face outside the sound booth. Jack was given 2 lists of words and instructed to read the words as fast as he could. The first list was familiar words, and the second list was comprised of nonsense words. The purpose of this test is to first evaluate reading efficiency and then evaluate the ability to "attack" unfamiliar words by using phonemic decoding/phonics rules. Standard Scores, percentiles, and grade level were calculated.

	Standard Score	Percentile	Grade Equivalent
Sight Word Efficiency	121	92nd	9.4
Phonemic Decoding Efficiency	125	95th	10.0

IMPRESSIONS

Peripheral assessment:

Jack's hearing and middle ear function were within normal limits today.

Central Assessment:

Jack was very cooperative for today's assessment, and the results are judged to be a good estimation of his true abilities. Jack performed well on the CST, DDT, FPT, and GIN showing relative strengths in the skill areas of binaural separation (listening to a message in one ear while ignoring a message in the other ear), binaural integration (listening to and processing different messages simultaneously), temporal resolution (detecting quick changes in a signal), and auditory pattern recognition. However, he struggled in other areas of auditory processing. He showed difficulty with auditory closure (listening to unclear speech) and listening in background noise. Thus, today's results meet criteria for the diagnosis of an auditory processing disorder (APD) (ICD-10 H93.25). The most salient findings will be highlighted below:

1. Jack is showing a weakness in auditory closure. Auditory closure is the brain's ability to make closure on an unclear signal. In other words, when a speech signal is missing some of its acoustic cues (due to distance, poor articulation by the speaker, fast talking, etc.) Jack has more difficulty than his peers discriminating and figuring out the message. This difficulty, along with his difficulty listening in background noise has important implications for the classroom. Many classrooms are noisy, and Jack is going to struggle to learn well with a significant amount of noise (or other factors) present that reduce the clarity of the signal. Children with this type of pattern also often have difficultly hearing on the telephone, particularly a cell phone, hearing in a restaurant or other noisy social setting, and may have difficulty following rapid conversations.

2. Jack's scores on the auditory memory portion of the TAPS-3 were superior for digits, solidly average for words, but low average for sentence recall indicating a relative weakness in his short-term auditory memory for linguistic (verbal) information. As the information became more linguistically loaded, Jack's performance worsened. Difficulty in this area has negative implications for following directions as verbal information is often not retained long enough to complete the task. This is not a specific auditory processing skill, but a higher order related skill.

3. Suspected language processing weaknesses. Auditory processing and language processing are very closely related, but they are not comprised of the same skills. These skills are happening on a continuum, with some overlap. An auditory processing disorder, in its purest form, is considered an input disorder, with much complex processing occurring as the signal leaves the eighth cranial nerve and travels through the brainstem and up into the cortex. At some point, meaning must be attached to the incoming signal. The process of word retrieval, attaching meaning to what has been heard, and formulating a response is considered language processing. Jack has signs of this difficulty. Although he passed the language screening, his processing of language appears weak; he often needed more time to respond and organize his thoughts. Helping Jack improve his understanding and use of language would benefit him. Further evaluation by a speech language pathologist is warranted.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Classroom Environmental Modifications

- Preferential seating. While preferential seating has no acoustic advantage, it does allow the teacher good visual access of the student and the student good visual access to the teacher. Seat Jack near the front and with a clear view of the speaker during classroom instruction. Do not seat Jack near auditory or visual distractions.

- Low gain hearing aids are recommended. Given Jack's difficulty processing degraded speech, he would likely benefit from the use of a mild gain amplification to "boost" the auditory signal and enhance the signal to noise ratio. The benefit of hearing aids is that they can be utilized in all environments, not just a classroom. If a hearing aid trial is not successful, however, a personal FM system should be utilized to help reduce the effects of distance and noise on the speech signal.

Classroom Accommodations

- Allow for extended test time or untimed tests. Often youth with auditory and language processing difficulties cannot work up to their full potential during timed tests.

- Allow Jack to take tests in a separate, quiet room as needed.

- Pre-teach new vocabulary and concepts; Jack should be given access to new topics before they are introduced in class to become familiar with some of the content ahead of time. This added familiarity will lessen his potential mishearing and increase comprehension if he has already had time to read/review the material. For example, if a review packet is sent home on Tuesday for a test on Friday, Jack should get the packet 3 or 4 days early.

- Allow Jack access to class notes by pairing him with another student or providing teacher notes and/or outlines.

- Repeat questions from other children before answering. Children who have difficulty listening in adverse conditions often miss what other children are asking, so they do not benefit from the teacher's answers. Research shows that at least 70% of what is learned is just overheard.

- Encourage Jack to ask questions. Encouraging him to ask clarification questions will help ensure his comprehension and understanding of directions.

- Provide face-to-face communication as often as possible.

- Teachers should discretely check on Jack after instructions for seat work have been given. Jack may not fully process or hear the directions; however, youth are often scared to speak up and advocate for their needs. The teacher should stop by Jack's desk to make sure he understands what is expected of him.

- Repeat missed information-more clearly, possibly a bit louder, better visual cues, etc., which allows more processing time and allows for auditory rehearsal to enhance memory.

- Rephrase and repeat instructions as needed when Jack does not seem to understand directions. Keeping directions short and simple will help with comprehension.

- Check understanding of classroom instruction by asking for paraphrasing or summarizing (rather than mere verbatim response, which does not demonstrate understanding).

- Use visual aids and other visual supports. Jack will benefit from hands on instruction and projects. Jack is likely to miss some information when it is only presented orally. Jack will benefit from handouts, and other visual cues that reinforce what he is expected to do.

- Gain attention using either auditory or visual alerting prior to giving verbal instructions.

- Redirect attention to task at hand as appropriate.

- Readily use signposts and topic transition cues such as first, second, last, then, now, next, and finally.

- Make a point to inform that there will be a classroom subject or topic changes.

- Emphasize the specific task parameters before beginning including What will be done, How it will be done, How long it will take, and What will be the outcome. This will improve external organization.

Direct Intervention

- Use HearBuilder Auditory Memory software program. This program uses a systematic approach to teach key strategies for remembering numbers, words, sentences, and stories. The program should be conducted with Jack listening to the auditory signals in a quiet setting under quality earphones, rather than computer speakers. Jack should use the software 15-20 minutes at least 4 to 5 times a week.

- Use HearBuilder Following Directions Software Program. This program helps develop essential listening skills as it teaches 40 basic concepts. Children learn to follow 5 types of directions: basic, sequential, quantitative, and spatial, temporal, and conditional. The program should be conducted with Jack listening to the auditory signals in a quiet setting under quality earphones, rather than computer speakers. Jack should use the software 15-20 minutes at least 3 to 4 times a week.

- Language Consultation. Due to Jack's auditory processing disorder, an evaluation of his present language skills should be completed. Language tests such as the Test of Language Competence- Expanded Edition and the Test of Auditory Comprehension of Language (TALC-3) are recommended to evaluate his language skills. An evaluation that particularly focuses on language processing will be helpful. Jack may benefit from language therapy that uses techniques related to though organization and expressive language. Contact a speech-language pathologist for this type of an evaluation.

- Occupational therapy. Jack has had OT in the past, but father was encouraged to pursue this therapy again since Jack still has many sensory integration issues and can become easily overwhelmed. Additional therapy to address sensory processing, motor planning, and executive functioning will likely be helpful.

Home Activities

- Practice effective communication skills. Reduce or eliminate noise when having a conversation or important dialogue. At home, this means turn off the TV, radio, or other distractions before communicating.

- Practice listening in noise at home:
    - Read a story aloud or play an audiobook through speakers, and then add noise in the background from another source (i.e., music, TV, etc.).

    - Intentionally introduce background noise during a conversation. Practice with and without visual cues and increase difficulty by increasing distance or making the noise louder.

- Develop ability to use visual, linguistic, and/or thinking abilities: Games: Charades, Read My Lips, Pictionary, Hangman, Twenty Questions, crossword puzzles, Password, Taboo, Catch-Phrase, Tribond.

- Use visual reminders regularly. Use calendars, lists, and other visual reminders to ensure follow through and alleviate some of the listening demands.

- Consider compression clothing and/or a weighted blanket to help with Jack's sensory regulation needs. Consultation with an occupational therapist would provide more recommendations.

- Use of a visual display timer to challenge Jack to complete assignments within the time allotted. Visual display timers are available from Tangible Time Management at www.timetimer.com or www.amazon.com. This can be used at home for homework and chores, or it could also be used at school.

- Stimulate the understanding and sequencing of specific directions. Examples:
  - Simon game
  - Cooking to a recipe
  - Board games are also useful for understanding and remembering simple directions and rules.

- Critical thinking software is available online at www.criticalthinking.com to develop reading comprehension, spatial reasoning, organization, writing, sequencing, deductive reasoning, vocabulary, and information processing skills.

- Provide/encourage multisensory learning activities such as music lessons, dance lessons, aerobics, and martial arts.

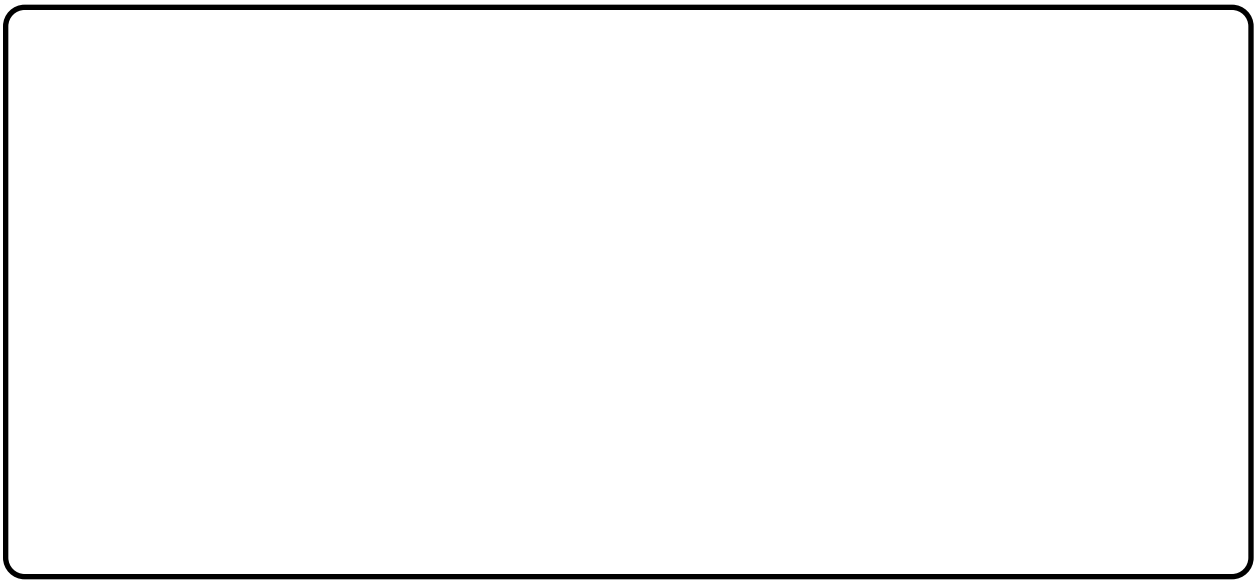
Anger Stop Signs

Anger starts out small, and slowly grows. When your anger is small, you might not even notice it. This is when you are just starting to feel upset about something, but it still doesn't seem like a big deal. Someone at this point might say they are "annoyed".

Draw what you look like when your anger is small. This is when you're just a little bit angry.



If your anger has the chance to grow too big, it becomes hard to control. It's like a car without brakes, crashing through everything in its path. It's very hard to stop. Someone who's this angry might yell, hit, cry, or try to break things.

Draw what you look like when your anger is big. This is when you're very angry.

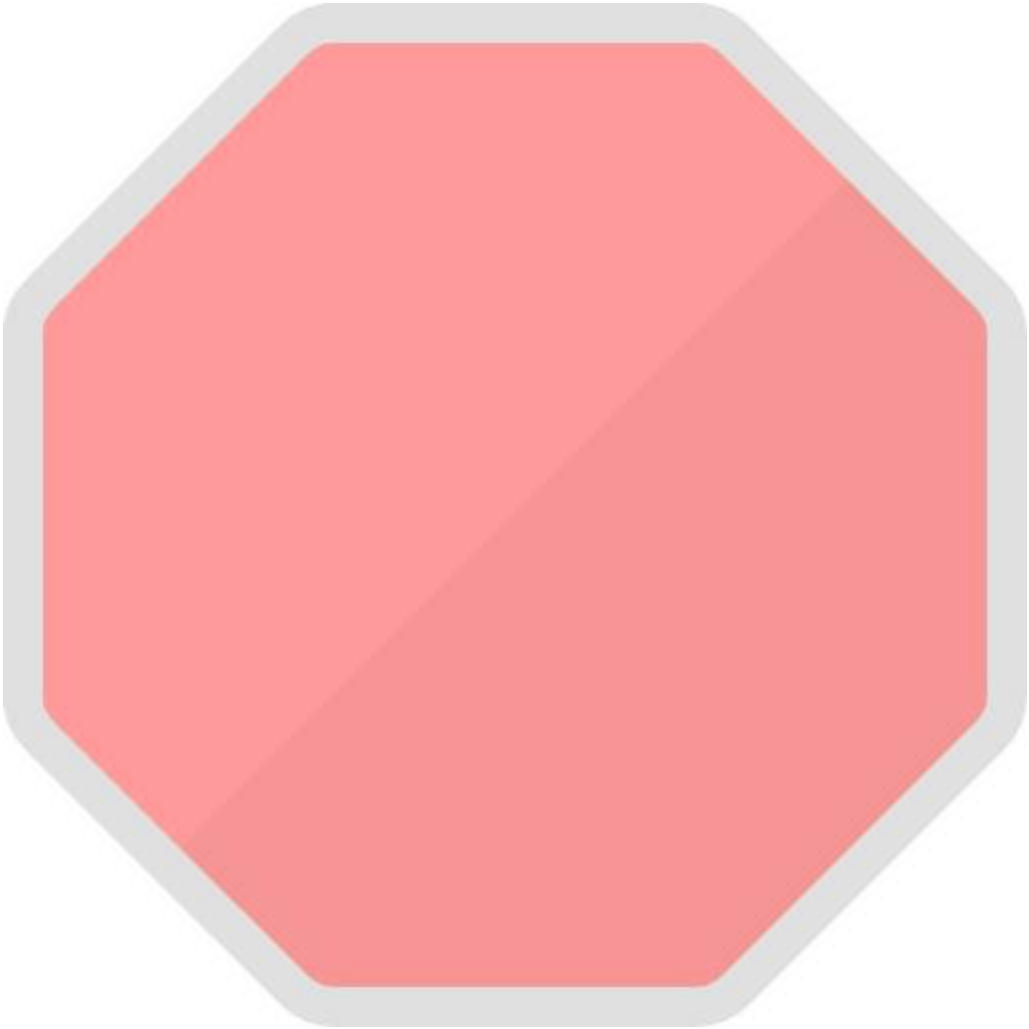
Anger Stop Signs

Anger stop signs are clues that your body uses to let you know your anger is growing. These clues start to appear while your anger is still small. If you notice them in time, you can hit the brakes, and take control of your anger before it grows too big.

Everyone has their own anger stop signs. It's important to learn what yours are, so you can spot them in the future. Write your anger stop signs in the space below.



Common Anger Stop Signs

My face feels hot.	I start to shake.	I raise my voice.
I go quiet.	My eyes get watery.	I try to bother people.
I can't think straight.	I feel annoyed.	I want to hit something.

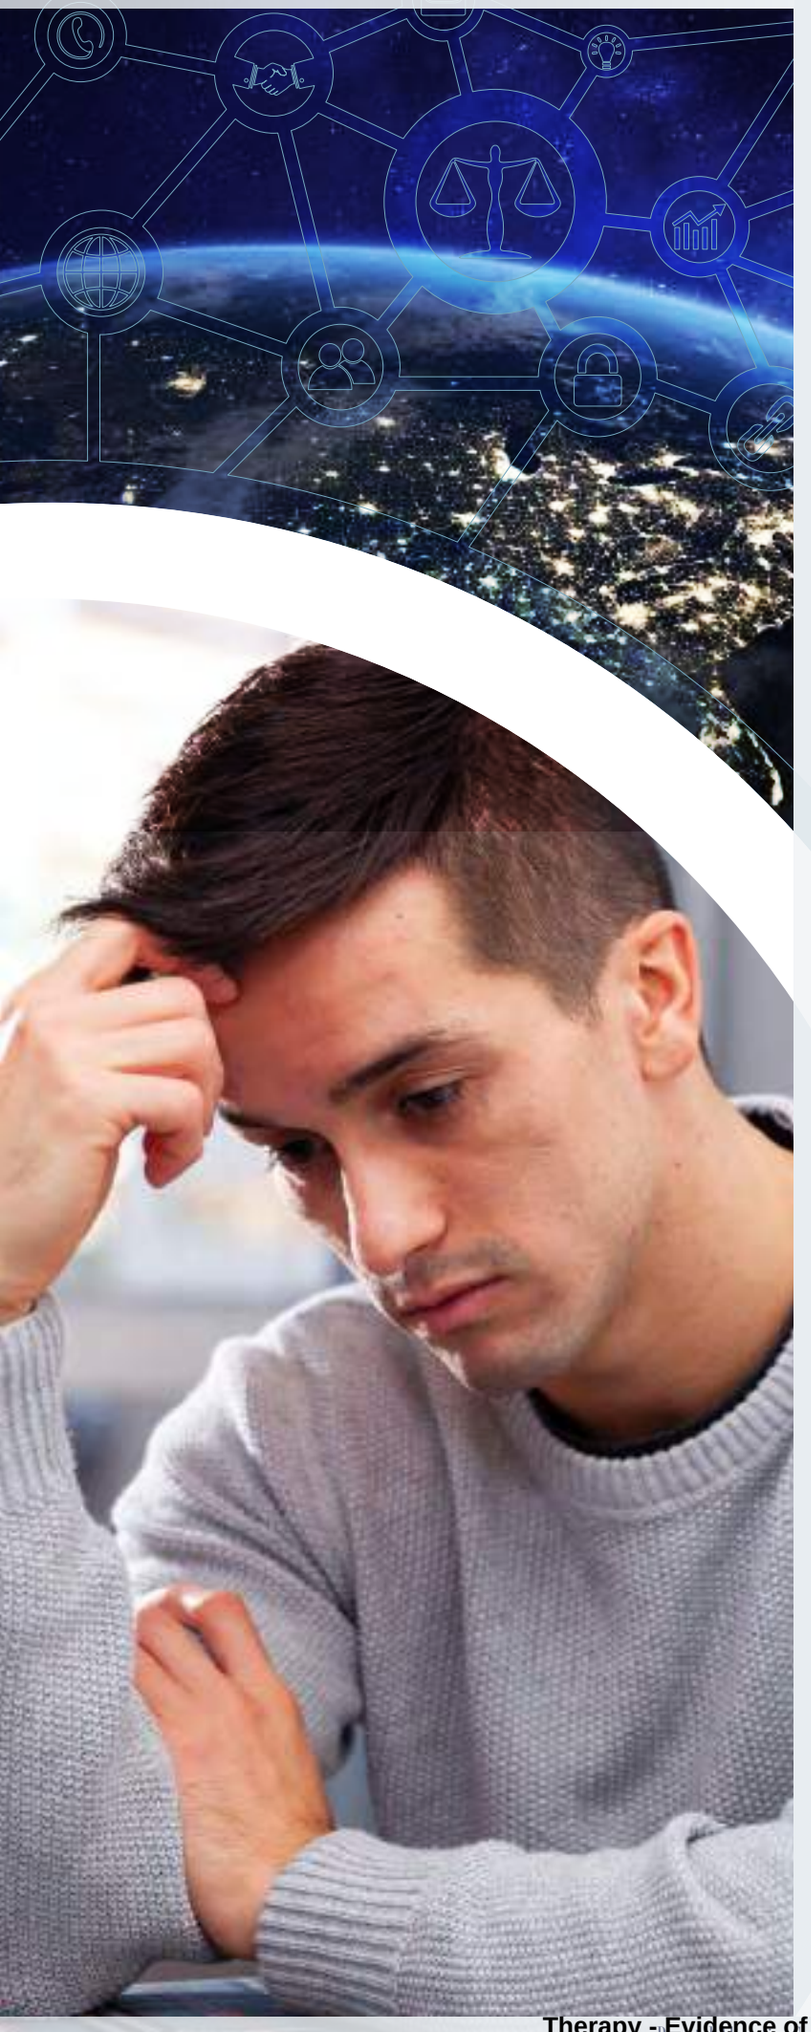
NCSC TRENDS IN STATE COURTS



Parental Alienation Can Be Emotional Child Abuse

Ken Lewis
Director, Child Custody Evaluation Services of Philadelphia, Inc.

What is and is not parental alienation? Here are some of its descriptors, possible effects on children, and tips for custody evaluators and family court judges.

When marital discord evolves into hatred, many couples are quick to see divorce as their best option. Divorce may be an easy way out for the couple, but it often wreaks havoc on the children. When parents seek help from state courts, family court judges can appoint mental health professionals as custody evaluators to guide them in determining the future best interests of the children. While these professionals are historically skilled at identifying physical child abuse, they are beginning to identify a more insidious form of emotional child abuse called parental alienation. When this form of abuse is correctly and timely identified, custody evaluators can recommend specific strategies for success.

Parental Alienation vs. Parental Alienation Syndrome

Parental alienation is frequently confused with the parental alienation syndrome (PAS). Dr. Richard Gardner, an American psychiatrist who died in 2003, coined the phrase "parental alienation syndrome" in 1985 and wrote extensively about it. He defined the syndrome as:

> a childhood disorder that arises almost exclusively in the context of child-custody disputes. It is a disorder in which children, programmed by the allegedly "loved" parent, embark upon a campaign of denigration of the allegedly "hated" parent. The children exhibit little if any ambivalence over their hatred, which often spreads to the extended family of the allegedly despised parent ("Recommendations for Dealing with Parents Who Induce a Parental Alienation Syndrome in Their Children," Journal of Divorce and Remarriage 28, nos. 3-4 [1998]).

Gardner used the term "syndrome" because of his medical background. A syndrome is a cluster of related symptoms. Syndromes are generally discouraged as evidence in court because they refer to symptoms from a collection of individuals, while the court is only concerned with those individuals who have standing for the matter before the court.

For Gardner, the syndrome describes the child's campaign of denigration against one of their parents—a campaign that is encouraged by the other parent. It should be noted that there is no PAS when abuse or neglect is present. PAS can only be applicable when the "hated" parent has not abused or neglected the child or exhibited any behavior that would justify the child's animosity toward that parent.

While PAS identifies a problem in the child ("a childhood disorder"), parental alienation identifies a collection of one parent's behaviors aimed at causing the child to become alienated from the other parent. Children can become alienated from a parent for a variety of reasons, such as sexual abuse, physical abuse, emotional abuse, parental abandonment, adult alcoholism, narcissism, and other reasons. Sometimes, a child may become alienated from the parent who initiated the divorce, blaming that parent for breaking up the family. But while these reasons may explain why the child is alienated from the parent, none would qualify as descriptors for parental alienation. Parental alienation is a strategy whereby one parent intentionally displays to the child unjustified negativity aimed at the other parent. The purpose of this strategy is to damage the child's relationship with the other parent and to turn the child's emotions against that other parent. This strategy has been called a "head-trip game" (see Ken Lewis, Child Custody Evaluations by Social Workers: Understanding the Five Stages of Custody [Washington, DC: NASW Press, 2009], p. 44).

Parental alienation is a particular family dynamic that can emerge during divorce in which the child becomes excessively hostile and rejecting of one parent. This hostility can involve transgenerational dynamics about which evaluators and family court judges should be aware.

The remainder of this article presents:

- a list of the various descriptors that identify parental alienation;
- the possible effects on the children;
- parental alienation as a form of emotional child abuse;
- the ways that courts have responded to parental alienation; and
- 10 tips for family court judges.

Parental Alienation Syndrome can only be applicable when the "hated" parent has not abused or neglected the child or exhibited any behavior that would justify the child's animosity toward that parent.

Descriptors of Parental Alienation

When investigating whether parental alienation is present, a custody evaluator looks for a variety of descriptors concerning the targeted parent and the alienating parent. Ten such descriptors are:

1. The child expresses a relentless hatred for the targeted parent.
2. The child's language parrots the language of the alienating parent.
3. The child vehemently rejects visiting the targeted parent.
4. Many of the child's beliefs are enmeshed with the alienating parent.
5. Many of the child's beliefs are delusional and frequently irrational.
6. The child's reasons are not from direct experiences but from what has been told to him or her by others.
7. The child has no ambivalence in his or her feelings; they are all hatred with no ability to see the good.
8. The child has no capacity to feel guilty about his or her behavior toward the targeted parent.
9. The child and the alienating parent are in lockstep to denigrate the targeted parent.
10. The child can appear like a normal healthy child. But when asked about the targeted parent, it triggers his or her hatred.

Parental alienation is a strategy whereby one parent intentionally displays to the child unjustified negativity aimed at the other parent. The purpose of this strategy is to damage the child's relationship with the other parent and to turn the child's emotions against that other parent.

Effects of Parental Alienation on the Children

Parental alienation is a form of emotional child abuse. The potential impact of this abuse on a child's life can be devastating. Some of the frequently listed effects of parental alienation have been reported in the child welfare literature, including:

- an impaired ability to establish and maintain future relationships;
- a lowering of the child's self-image;
- a loss of self-respect;
- the evolution of guilt, anxiety, and depression over their role in destroying their relationship with a previously loved parent;
- lack of impulse control (aggression can turn into delinquent behavior); and
- educational problems, disruptions in school.

Family therapists who have treated alienated children have classified the problem as a "parent-child relational problem," as outlined by the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (4th ed.).

Parental Alienation and Emotional Child Abuse in State Statutes

Children who suffer from emotional abuse often elude the legal assistance of the child protection system. For example, this emotional abuse is usually invisible to teachers and social workers and even the family court judge. The alienated child will talk with the judge in language and syntax similar if not identical to the way the alienating parent talks. While the targeted parent often appears anxious, depressed, or angry, the alienating parent appears relaxed, composed, and, therefore, credible.

The normative framework of the child protection system does not always include the emotional abuse of children. For the majority of states, the physical health and safety of children are focal points in determining whether abuse or neglect has occurred. Nonetheless, 48 states include emotional abuse or maltreatment in their abuse definitions. (Emotional maltreatment is not included in statutory definitions in Georgia and Washington, but it can be found elsewhere in their statutes.)

Samples of Statutory Definitions in the United States and Canada

California

"A child who is suffering serious emotional damage, or is at substantial risk of suffering serious emotional damage, evidenced by severe anxiety, depression, withdrawal, or untoward aggressive behavior toward self or others, as a result of the conduct of the parent or guardian."
W.I.C. §300 subd. (c) 2000 [Welfare and Institutions Code].

Michigan

"'Serious mental harm' means an injury to a child's mental condition … that is not necessarily permanent but results in visibly demonstrable manifestations of a substantial disorder of thought or mood which significantly impairs judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality." MCL 750.136b (1)(g).

Punishment for serious mental harm is prescribed: "A person is guilty of child abuse in the first degree if the person knowingly or intentionally causes serious physical or serious mental harm to a child. Child abuse in the first degree is a felony punishable by imprisonment for not more than 15 years." MCL 750.136b (2).

Minnesota

"Persons guilty of neglect or endangerment (include) a parent … who endangers the child's … health by: … permitting a child to be placed in a situation likely to substantially harm the child's … emotional health."
Minn. Stat. § 609.378, Subdivision 1 (a)(2)(b)(1) (2005).

Nevada

"'Substantial mental harm' means an injury to the … emotional condition of a child as evidenced by an observable and substantial impairment of the ability of the child to function within his normal range of performance or behavior."
Nev. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 200.508, 4 (e) (2006).

North Dakota

"A parent … who willfully inflicts … upon the child mental injury … is guilty of a class C felony except if the victim … is under the age of six years in which case the offense is a class B felony."
N.D Cent. Code, § 14-09-22.1 (2013).

Wyoming

"'Mental injury'" means an injury to the … emotional stability of a child as evidenced by an observable … impairment in his ability to function within a normal range of performance."
Wyo. Stat. § 14-3-202 (A) (2006).

Manitoba

"The best interests of the child shall be the paramount consideration of the … court in all proceedings … . [R]elevant matters shall [include] … the child's opportunity to have a parent-child relationship as a wanted and needed member within a family structure … [and] the … emotional … needs of the child and the appropriate care … to meet such needs."
The Child and Family Services Act, 1985, C.C.S.M. c. C80 2(1)(a) & (b) [Continuing Consolidation of the Statutes of Manitoba].

Ontario

"No person having charge of a child shall permit the child to suffer from a mental, emotional or developmental condition that, if not remedied, could seriously impair the child's development."
Ontario Child and Family Services Act, R.S.O. 1990, Chapter C.11 sec. 79 (2)(b)(ii).

Whether "mental harm," "mental injury," "emotional instability," "emotional endangerment," "emotional damage," or some other phrase, it is clear that emotional child abuse is a statutory crime. When one parent intentionally encourages the child to turn against the other parent, he or she is employing parental alienation as a strategy.

When this strategy is used by one parent in hopes of alienating the child against the other parent, it is tantamount to teaching the child how to hate. Canadian Judge John H. Gomery put it eloquently this way: "Hatred is not an emotion that comes naturally to a child. It has to be taught.... Defendant has deliberately poisoned the minds of his children against the mother that they formerly loved and needed" (Stuart-Mills, P. v. Cher, A.J., Sup. Ct. Quebec, District of Montreal [1991]).

Parental alienation can be administered in mild or extreme amounts, or anything in between. In its extreme form, it can be defined as criminal behavior, consistent with the various state definitions presented above.

When the strategy [of parental alienation] is successful, the emotional consequences to the child can be damaging and may rise to the level of criminal behavior.

How the Courts Have Responded to Parental Alienation

Courts in different states have responded to parental alienation in different ways. Basically, there have been four categories of these responses.

Criminal Response. Some states make interference with custody a criminal offense. For example, New Jersey makes interference a crime of the third degree that may lead to imprisonment for three to five years or a fine of $7,500 or both. All states make emotional child abuse or maltreatment of a child a criminal offense. Some extreme cases of parental alienation may warrant this response.

Civil Remedies. All courts can impose civil sanctions by way of contempt-of-court orders. When a parent's strategy of parental alienation endangers the child's relationship with the other parent, some of the possible civil remedies may be economic sanctions against the alienating parent or short incarceration time for contempt of court.

Custody Responses. All courts that have initial custody jurisdiction have the authority to modify previous custody orders. Responses to parental alienation have been to deny initial custody (order a parental alienation evaluation, deny custody to the alienating parent); to modify visitation (extend visits between the child and the alienated parent, establish supervised visitations); and to modify previous custody (temporary modification of custody for specific time periods, permanent modification of custody, reverse custody).

Therapeutic Responses. Family law's innovations and reforms have become the showcase for therapeutic jurisprudence. Parental alienation cases provide opportunity to demonstrate how the strategy of replacing the "punishment" role of the courts with the therapeutic "fix-the-problem" approach can advantage children. Evaluation and therapy are earmarks of the therapeutic response to parental alienation.

The court could order an evaluation of the child to determine whether parental alienation is operative in a case and, if so, at what level is it operative.

- The court could order individual therapy for the alienator.
- The court could order family therapy in mild cases.
- Parental alienation therapy by a specialist could be ordered by the court in extreme cases.

Ten Tips for Custody Evaluators and Family Court Judges

Tip #1	There is no parental alienation when there is reasonable justification for the child to express negativity against one parent.
Tip #2	Parental alienation can be a strategy used by the custodial parent, the noncustodial parent, or both parents.
Tip #3	Parental alienation is nearly impossible when the child is an infant.
Tip #4	The beginning stage of parental alienation is difficult to begin in the child's late teen years.
Tip #5	Parental alienation can be operative on one sibling, while not operative on the other siblings.
Tip #6	If parental alienation is suspected or alleged, it should be assessed by a custody evaluator experienced in the matter.
Tip #7	Extreme parental alienation should be considered emotional child abuse and referred criminally.
Tip #8	Often parental alienation can be reduced or eradicated by ordering more time between the child and the targeted parent. When a child spends frequent positive time (primary experience) with one parent, it is less likely that the other parent's parental alienation strategy will be successful.
Tip #9	Parental alienation case law is growing; family court judges should become familiar with cases in their jurisdictions.
Tip #10	Identify mental health professionals in family court jurisdictions who have expertise in parental alienation.

Parental Alienation Bench Card

Parental Alienation Descriptors

- ☐ 1. The child expresses a relentless hatred for the targeted parent.
- ☐ 2. The child's language parrots the language of the alienating parent.
- ☐ 3. The child vehemently rejects visiting the targeted parent.
- ☐ 4. Many of the child's beliefs are enmeshed with the alienating parent.
- ☐ 5. Many of the child's beliefs are delusional and frequently irrational.
- ☐ 6. The child's reasons derive from what has been told to the child by others.
- ☐ 7. The child has no ambivalence about his or her negative feelings; they are all hatred.
- ☐ 8. The child feels no guilt about his or her negativity toward the targeted parent.
- ☐ 9. The child and the alienating parent are in lockstep to denigrate the targeted parent.
- ☐ 10. The child can appear like a normal healthy child, but, when asked about the targeted parent, it triggers his or her hatred.

Effects of Parental Alienation on the Alienated Child

- ☐ 1. An impaired ability to establish and maintain future relationships.
- ☐ 2. A low self-image.
- ☐ 3. A loss of self-respect.
- ☐ 4. Over time: guilt and depression for destroying the relationship with a previously loved parent.
- ☐ 5. Lack of impulse control. Aggression can turn into delinquent behavior.

Court's Possible Responses During Child Custody Litigation

- ☐ 1. Enter order to determine whether parental alienation is operative and, if so, at what level.
- ☐ 2. Order individual therapy for the alienator.
- ☐ 3. Order family therapy in mild cases.
- ☐ 4. In more severe cases, order parental alienation therapy by a specialist.

Caution: If possible, parental alienation should be addressed in its early stages. It is significantly more difficult to treat if it progresses over time and grows more intense.

This medicine information sheet has been written specifically for male patients.

Leuprolide Injection (CPP)

Pronunciation: (loo PROE lide)
Brand Name: Lupron Depot-Ped
Product Dispensed: Lupron Depot-Ped (3-Month)

What is this drug used for?

- It is used to delay puberty in children who are maturing too early.

What do I need to tell my doctor BEFORE I take this drug?

- If your child is allergic to this drug; any part of this drug; or any other drugs, foods, or substances. Tell the doctor about the allergy and what signs your child had.

If your child is pregnant:

- Do not give this drug to your child during pregnancy.

This drug may interact with other drugs or health problems.

Tell the doctor and pharmacist about all of your child's drugs (prescription or OTC, natural products, vitamins) and health problems. You must check to make sure that it is safe to give this drug with all of your child's other drugs and health problems. Do not start, stop, or change the dose of any drug your child takes without checking with the doctor.

What are some things I need to know or do while I take this drug?

- Tell all of your child's health care providers that your child is taking this drug. This includes your child's doctors, nurses, pharmacists, and dentists.
- Have blood work checked as you have been told by the doctor. Talk with the doctor.
- This drug may affect certain lab tests. Tell all of your child's health care providers and lab workers that your child takes this drug.
- This drug may raise some hormone levels in your child's body during the first few weeks of taking it. Puberty signs like vaginal bleeding or spotting may happen or get worse before getting better. Tell the doctor if your child has any new signs or if your child still has puberty signs after 2 months of care.
- This drug may affect growth in children and teens in some cases. They may need regular growth checks. Talk with the doctor.
- If your child is of childbearing age, a pregnancy test will need to be done before starting this drug to make sure your child is not pregnant.
- This drug may affect fertility during treatment. Fertility problems may lead to not being able to have a child. This effect goes back to normal when the drug is stopped. If you have questions, talk with the doctor.

If your child is or may be sexually active:

- If your child is using birth control, be sure your child uses a non-hormone type of birth control like condoms to prevent pregnancy while taking this drug.

If your child is pregnant or breast-feeding a baby:

- This drug may cause harm to the unborn baby if your child takes it during pregnancy. If your child is pregnant or gets pregnant while taking this drug, call the doctor right away.
- Tell the doctor if your child is breast-feeding a baby. You will need to talk about any risks to the baby.

How is this drug best taken?

Give this drug as ordered by your child's doctor. Read all information given to you. Follow all instructions closely.

- It is given as a shot.

What do I do if I miss a dose?

- Call your child's doctor to find out what to do.

What are some side effects that I need to call my doctor about right away?

WARNING/CAUTION: Even though it may be rare, some people may have very bad and sometimes deadly side effects when taking a drug. Tell your child's doctor or get medical help right away if your child has any of the following signs or symptoms that may be related to a very bad side effect:

- Signs of an allergic reaction, like rash; hives; itching; red, swollen, blistered, or peeling skin with or without fever; wheezing; tightness in the chest or throat; trouble breathing, swallowing, or talking; unusual hoarseness; or swelling of the mouth, face, lips, tongue, or throat.
- A fast heartbeat.
- Fever.
- Seizures.
- Swelling or numbness in the arms or legs.
- Very bad bone pain.
- Chest pain.
- A very bad pituitary gland problem (pituitary apoplexy) has rarely happened with this drug. Most of the time, this has happened within 2 weeks after the first dose. Call the doctor right away if your child has a sudden headache, throwing up, passing out, mood changes, eye weakness, not able to move eyes, or change in eyesight.
- Behavior and mood changes have happened with the use of drugs like this one in children. This includes acting aggressive, crying, depression, emotional ups and downs, restlessness, feeling angry and irritable, and suicidal thoughts or actions. Call your child's doctor right away if your child has any new or worse behavior or mood changes.
- Raised pressure in the brain has happened in children using drugs like this one. Call the doctor right away if your child has a headache; eyesight problems like blurred eyesight, seeing double, or loss of eyesight; pain behind the eye; pain when moving the eye; ringing in the ears; dizziness; or very upset stomach.

What are some other side effects of this drug?

All drugs may cause side effects. However, many people have no side effects or only have minor side effects. Call your child's doctor or get medical help if any of these side effects or any other side effects bother your child or do not go away:

- Irritation where the shot is given.
- Headache.
- Hot flashes.
- Sweating a lot.
- Pimples (acne).
- Weight gain.
- Upset stomach or throwing up.
- Signs of a common cold.
- Nose or throat irritation.
- Cough.
- Stomach pain.
- Constipation.

These are not all of the side effects that may occur. If you have questions about side effects, call your child's doctor. Call your child's doctor for medical advice about side effects.

You may report side effects to the FDA at 1-800-332-1088. You may also report side effects at https://www.fda.gov/medwatch.

If OVERDOSE is suspected:

If you think there has been an overdose, call your poison control center or get medical care right away. Be ready to tell or show what was taken, how much, and when it happened.

How do I store and/or throw out this drug?

- If you need to store this drug at home, talk with your child's doctor, nurse, or pharmacist about how to store it.

Consumer Information Use and Disclaimer

- If your child's symptoms or health problems do not get better or if they become worse, call your child's doctor.
- Do not share your child's drug with others and do not give anyone else's drug to your child.
- Keep all drugs in a safe place. Keep all drugs out of the reach of children and pets.
- Throw away unused or expired drugs. Do not flush down a toilet or pour down a drain unless you are told to do so. Check with your pharmacist if you have questions about the best way to throw out drugs. There may be drug take-

Pubertal Suppression for Youth with Gender Dysphoria/Gender Incongruence

What are puberty blockers?

The technical name for puberty blockers is gonadotropin releasing hormone analogues (GnRHa). These medications were initially developed to treat patients with extremely early pubertal development. When used continuously, these medications suppress the secretion of puberty hormones by the pituitary gland.

When are puberty blockers used?

These medications can prevent or stop development of the body changes associated with puberty. For those assigned female at birth, these medications prevent breast development and menstrual cycles. For those assigned male at birth, these medications prevent enlargement of the testes and the penis, voice deepening, facial hair growth, masculine facial features and bone structures. These medications are generally started following the initial physical signs of puberty and are continued as long as suppression is required: until gonadal suppression is achieved with gender affirming hormones or with gender affirming surgery. Sometimes, these medications are used in adolescents who have already started puberty. These medications are effective to stop menstrual cycles.

What are the specific types of these medications and how are they administered?

Leuprolide acetate depot (trade name: Lupron Depot) and Triptorelin (trade name: Triptodur) are administered by intramuscular injections. These are time-released medication that can be administered every 1, 3 or 6 months depending on the specific formulation. Histrelin acetate (trade names: Supprelin LA and Vantas) is another time-released medication that is formulated as a subcutaneous implant that can be placed underneath the skin of the upper arm. The duration of action of histrelin acetate is one year or longer.

What are the benefits of puberty blockers?

Once pubertal changes have developed, it might be difficult to align the body with the individual's affirmed gender. The medical procedures used to alter these secondary sexual characteristics such as electrolysis and "top surgery" are painful and expensive. One major benefit of initiating this therapy at the onset of puberty is the prevention of the development of the secondary sexual features associated with puberty. These medications are reversible and allow adolescents to explore their gender identity without the distress and dysphoria provoked by ongoing pubertal development. Adolescents with gender dysphoria who undergo pubertal suppression have decreased depressive symptoms. Puberty suppression is recommended by the Pediatric Endocrine Society for adolescents with gender dysphoria who meet specific criteria (Endocrine Society Guidelines 2017).

Will my child's insurance cover the cost of puberty blockers?

Puberty blockers are expensive. Financial coverage or payment by insurance companies can be difficult to obtain. Nevertheless, more insurance companies are covering the costs. It is important to review with your insurance carrier benefits coverage for this service.

What are the potential negative outcomes with puberty blockers?

Treatment of transgender adolescents with puberty blockers is fairly recent. As a result, little information is available regarding long term outcome measures, including unknown long term mental health consequences. However, for approximately the past 30 years, these medications have been successfully used to treat precocious puberty with few side effects identified. Nevertheless, given the importance of pubertal hormones for bone development, concerns exist regarding the long-term use of GnRHa alone on bone health. Another concern is limited future fertility options when GnRHa are used early on followed by gender affirming hormones. It is important to discuss with an experienced provider different treatment options and all aspects of treatment risks and benefits.

Anger Iceberg

In some families, anger is seen as more acceptable than other emotions. A person might express anger in order to mask emotions that cause them to feel vulnerable, such as hurt or shame.

Anger triggers are people, places, situations, and things that set off anger. Your triggers can provide clues about the emotions behind your anger.

Anger is an emotion that tends to be easy to see. However, anger is often just the tip of the iceberg. Other emotions may be hidden beneath the surface.

Anger may be fueled by different emotions at different times, or by a combination of emotions. Sometimes, however, anger is just anger.

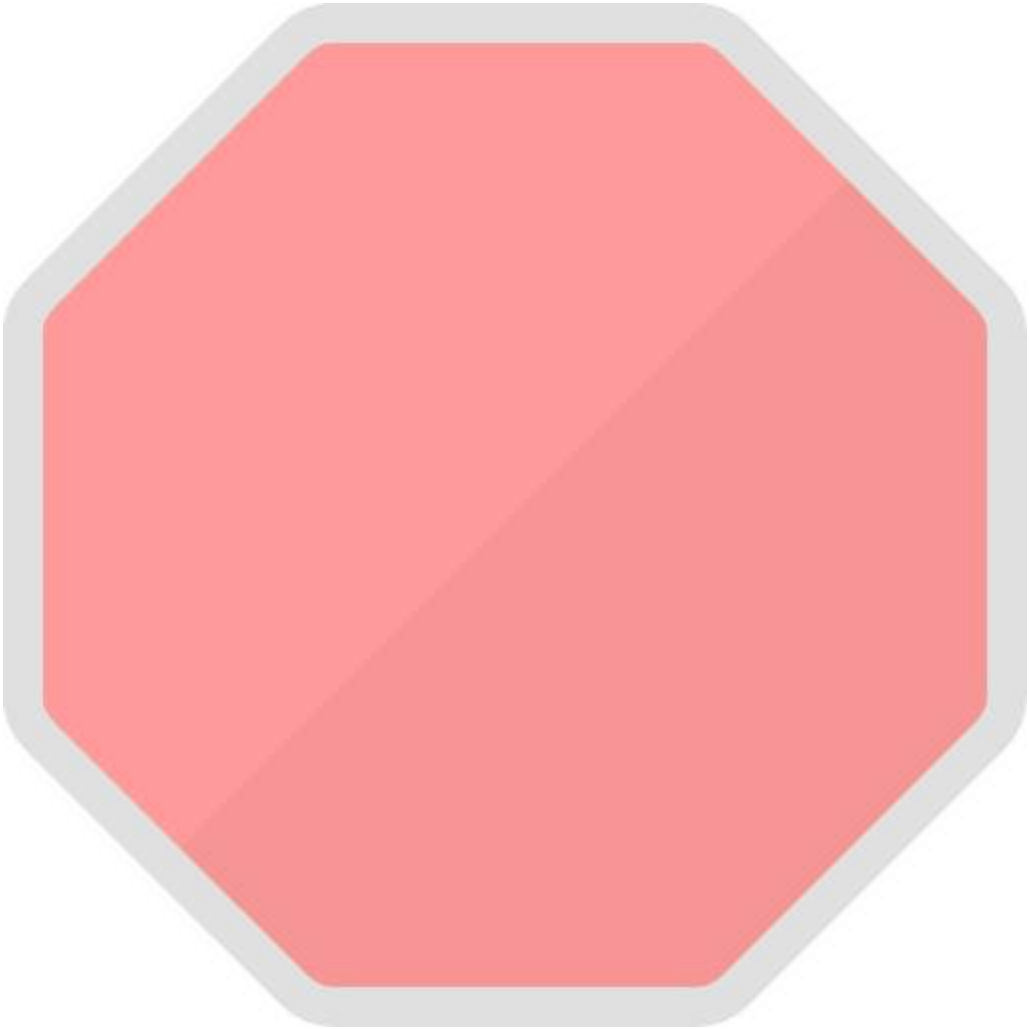
Anger Stop Signs

Anger stop signs are clues that your body uses to let you know your anger is growing. These clues start to appear while your anger is still small. If you notice them in time, you can hit the brakes, and take control of your anger before it grows too big.

Everyone has their own anger stop signs. It's important to learn what yours are, so you can spot them in the future. Write your anger stop signs in the space below.



Common Anger Stop Signs

My face feels hot.	I start to shake.	I raise my voice.
I go quiet.	My eyes get watery.	I try to bother people.
I can't think straight.	I feel annoyed.	I want to hit something.

Anger Warning Signs

Sometimes anger can affect what you say or do before you even recognize how you're feeling. You may become so used to the feeling of anger that you don't notice it, sort of like how you can hear the sound of an air condition, or the humming of a refrigerator, but block it from your mind.

Even if you aren't aware of your anger, it influences how you behave. The first step to managing anger is learning to recognize your personal warning signs that will tip you off about how you're feeling.

How do you react when you feel angry? Some of these warning signs might start when you are only a little irritated, and others might start when you are very angry. Circle the warning signs that apply to you.

Mind goes blank	Insult the other person	Face turns red
Body or hands shake	Start sweating	Throw things
Heavy or fast breathing	Stare at the other person aggressively	Scowl or make an angry face
Scream, raise voice, or yell	Clench fists	Feel sick to the stomach
Punch walls	Feel hot	Become aggressive
Become argumentative	Go quiet and "shut down"	Crying
Pace around the room	Headaches	Can't stop thinking about the problem

What are four things you can do while taking a break from an angry situation?

Draw or write about them here.

pet a cat

Draw on a piece of paper.

Playing ball with daddy.

Playing hide & seek with mommy.

Anger is like that, too. You have to make a decision to step aside. That doesn't mean you're giving in. It just means you're taking a break. There are lots of ways to take a break.

You can go to your room.

You can shoot some baskets.

You can read a book.

You can let your pet lizard crawl up your arm.

You can even take a break at school by going to get a drink of water or drawing a picture of your favorite cartoon character on a spare piece of paper.

Anger

Be Aware of Triggers

Anger triggers are the things that set you off. Knowing your triggers, and being cautious around them, will reduce the likelihood of your anger getting out of control.

How to use triggers to your advantage:

- Create a list of your triggers and review them daily. Reviewing your triggers will keep them fresh in your mind, increasing the likelihood you notice them before they become a problem.
- Oftentimes, the best way to deal with a trigger is to avoid it. This might mean making changes to your lifestyle, relationships, or daily routine.
- Because it isn't always possible to avoid triggers, have a plan when you must face them. For example, avoid touchy conversations when you are tired, hungry, or upset.

Practice Deep Breathing

Deep breathing is a simple technique that's excellent for managing emotions. Not only is deep breathing effective, it's also discreet and easy to use at any time or place.

Sit comfortably and place one hand on your abdomen. Breathe in through your nose, deeply enough that the hand on your abdomen rises. Hold the air in your lungs, and then exhale slowly through your mouth, with your lips puckered as if you are blowing through a straw. The secret is to go slow: Time the inhalation (4s), pause (4s), and exhalation (6s). Practice for 3 to 5 minutes.

Keep an Anger Log

Following an episode of anger, take a few moments to record your experience. This practice will help you identify patterns, warning signs, and triggers, while also helping you organize thoughts and work through problems.

- What was happening before the anger episode? Describe how you were feeling, and what was on your mind. Were you hungry, tired, or stressed?
- Describe the facts of what happened. What events triggered your anger? How did you react, and did your reaction change as the event continued to unfold?
- What were your thoughts and feelings during the anger episode? Looking back, do you see anything differently than when you were in the heat of the moment?

Coping Skills

Anger

Use Diversions

The goal of diversions is to buy yourself time. If you can distract yourself for just 30 minutes, you'll have a better chance of dealing with your anger in a healthy way. Remember, you can always return to the source of your anger later—you're just setting the problem aside for now.

go for a walk	read a book	play a sport	listen to music
watch a movie	practice a hobby	go for a run	clean or organize
do yard work	draw or paint	do a craft	cook or bake play a game	go for a bicycle ride	write or journal	take a long bath play an instrument	call a friend	lift weights	go swimming go hiking in nature	take photographs	play with a pet	rearrange a room

Take a Time-out

Time-outs are a powerful tool for relationships where anger-fueled disagreements are causing problems. When someone calls a time-out, both individuals agree to walk away from the problem, and return once you have both had an opportunity to cool down.

How to use time-outs effectively:

- With your partner, plan exactly how time-outs will work. Everyone should understand the rationale behind time-outs (an opportunity to cool down—not to avoid a problem).
- What will you both do during time-outs? Plan activities that are in different rooms or different places. The list of diversions from above is a good place to begin.
- Plan to return to the problem in 30 minutes to an hour. Important problems shouldn't be ignored forever, but nothing good will come from an explosive argument.

Know Your Warning Signs

Anger warning signs are the clues your body gives you that your anger is starting to grow. When you learn to spot your warning signs, you can begin to address your anger while it's still weak.

sweating	can't get past problem	feel hot / turn red	clenched fists headaches	becoming argumentative	raised voice	using verbal insults pacing	aggressive body language	feel sick to stomach	go quiet / "shut down"

Goal Breakdown

Imagine you want to find a new job. This is a big goal with many time-consuming steps. Such a major goal can be very stressful, or even overwhelming. This is the type of goal that you will always start “tomorrow” or “next week”, but those times never seem to come.

Learning to break your goals into small tasks will help you overcome the stress and procrastination they create. For example, finding a new job can be broken down like this:

	Goal Task	Time Required	Schedule
☐	Research job interests and write a list of careers that interest me.	1 hour	Sunday afternoon
☐	Revise resume by adding recent job experiences.	1 hour	Monday, after dinner
☐	Spend 45 minutes looking at job openings.	45 minutes	Wednesday, after dinner

Tips for Breaking Goals into Tasks

Avoid creating tasks that require longer than one hour, unless absolutely necessary.
If you find a task is difficult to start, it might be too big. See if it can be broken down further. For example, “practice playing guitar” can be broken down to “practice the beginning of a song”.
Long tasks that cannot be broken down further should be set to a time limit (e.g. “Spend 45 minutes looking at job openings”).
The tasks you create are not set in stone. If a task is more difficult than expected, break it down further or spread it out over more time. If a task is easier than expected, combine it with other tasks.
Protect the time that you schedule for tasks. Turn off your phone, go somewhere with few distractions, and set a timer to keep track of how long you’ve been working.

Protective Factors

Protective factors are things that contribute to mental health, and allow a person to be resilient in the face of challenges. Someone with a lot of protective factors—such as strong relationships and healthy coping skills—will be better equipped to overcome life's obstacles.

Many protective factors are out of your control. For example, genetics, the neighborhood where you grew up, and family cannot be changed. However, plenty of factors can be controlled. You choose the people in your life, how to cope with problems, and how you'll spend each day.

By focusing on what you can control, and building upon those protective factors, you will improve your ability to cope with many of life's challenges.

My Protective Factors

Instructions: Review each of the following protective factors, and mark the scales to indicate how well you are performing in each area.

Social Support

- ability to talk about problems
- people to ask for practical help (e.g. a ride if car breaks down)
- feelings of love, intimacy, or friendship

Weak Moderate Strong

Coping Skills

- ability to manage uncomfortable emotions in a healthy way
- awareness of one's own emotions, and recognition of how they influence behavior

Weak Moderate Strong

Physical Health

- adequate exercise or physical activity
- a balanced and healthy diet
- medical compliance (e.g. taking medications as prescribed)

Weak Moderate Strong

Sense of Purpose

- meaningful involvement in work, education, or other roles (e.g. parenting)
- understanding of personal values, and living in accordance with those values

Weak Moderate Strong

Self-Esteem

- belief that one's self has value
- acceptance of personal flaws, weaknesses, and mistakes
- belief in ability to overcome challenges

Weak Moderate Strong

Healthy Thinking

- does not ruminate on mistakes, personal flaws, or problems
- ability to consider personal strengths and weaknesses rationally

Relaxation Techniques

When a person is confronted with anxiety, their body undergoes several changes and enters a special state called the fight-or-flight response. The body prepares to either fight or flee the perceived danger.

During the fight-or-flight response it's common to experience a "blank" mind, increased heart rate, sweating, tense muscles, and more. Unfortunately, these bodily responses do little good when it comes to protecting us from modern sources of anxiety.

Using a variety of skills, you can end the fight-or-flight response before the symptoms become too extreme. These skills will require practice to work effectively, so don't wait until the last minute to try them out!

Deep Breathing

It's natural to take long, deep breaths, when relaxed. However, during the fight-or-flight response, breathing becomes rapid and shallow. Deep breathing reverses that, and sends messages to the brain to begin calming the body. Practice will make your body respond more efficiently to deep breathing in the future.

Breathe in slowly. Count in your head and make sure the inward breath lasts at least 5 seconds. Pay attention to the feeling of the air filling your lungs.
Hold your breath for 5 to 10 seconds (again, keep count). You don't want to feel uncomfortable, but it should last quite a bit longer than an ordinary breath.
Breathe out very slowly for 5 to 10 seconds (count!). Pretend like you're breathing through a straw to slow yourself down. Try using a real straw to practice.
Repeat the breathing process until you feel calm.

Imagery

Think about some of your favorite and least favorite places. If you think about the place hard enough—if you really try to think about what it's like—you may begin to have feelings you associate with that location. Our brain has the ability to create emotional reactions based entirely off of our thoughts. The imagery technique uses this to its advantage.

Make sure you're somewhere quiet without too much noise or distraction. You'll need a few minutes to just spend quietly, in your mind.
Think of a place that's calming for you. Some examples are the beach, hiking on a mountain, relaxing at home with a friend, or playing with a pet.

© 2013 Therapist Aid LLC

Relaxation Techniques

Paint a picture of the calming place in your mind. Don't just think of the place briefly—imagine every little detail. Go through each of your senses and imagine what you would experience in your relaxing place. Here's an example using a beach:

a. Sight: The sun is high in the sky and you're surrounded by white sand. There's no one else around. The water is a greenish-blue and waves are calmly rolling in from the ocean.

b. Sound: You can hear the deep pounding and splashing of the waves. There are seagulls somewhere in the background.

c. Touch: The sun is warm on your back, but a breeze cools you down just enough. You can feel sand moving between your toes.

d. Taste: You have a glass of lemonade that's sweet, tart, and refreshing.

e. Smell: You can smell the fresh ocean air, full of salt and calming aromas.

Progressive Muscle Relaxation

During the fight-or-flight response, the tension in our muscles increases. This can lead to a feeling of stiffness, or even back and neck pain. Progressive muscle relaxation teaches us to become more aware of this tension so we can better identify and address stress.

Find a private and quiet location. You should sit or lie down somewhere comfortable.

The idea of this technique is to intentionally tense each muscle, and then to release the tension. Let's practice with your feet.

a. Tense the muscles in your toes by curling them into your foot. Notice how it feels when your foot is tense. Hold the tension for 5 seconds.

b. Release the tension from your toes. Let them relax. Notice how your toes feel differently after you release the tension.

c. Tense the muscles all throughout your calf. Hold it for 5 seconds. Notice how the feeling of tension in your leg feels.

d. Release the tension from your calf, and notice how the feeling of relaxation differs.

Follow this pattern of tensing and releasing tension all throughout your body. After you finish with your feet and legs, move up through your torso, arms, hands, neck, and head.

Are fibrinaloid microclots a cause of autoimmunity in Long Covid and other post-infection diseases?

Douglas B Kell [1 2 3], Etheresia Pretorius [1 3]

Affiliations

PMID: 37584410 DOI: 10.1042/BCJ20230241

Abstract

It is now well established that the blood-clotting protein fibrinogen can polymerise into an anomalous form of fibrin that is amyloid in character; the resultant clots and microclots entrap many other molecules, stain with fluorogenic amyloid stains, are rather resistant to fibrinolysis, can block up microcapillaries, are implicated in a variety of diseases including Long COVID, and have been referred to as fibrinaloids. A necessary corollary of this anomalous polymerisation is the generation of novel epitopes in proteins that would normally be seen as 'self', and otherwise immunologically silent. The precise conformation of the resulting fibrinaloid clots (that, as with prions and classical amyloid proteins, can adopt multiple, stable conformations) must depend on the existing small molecules and metal ions that the fibrinogen may (and is some cases is known to) have bound before polymerisation. Any such novel epitopes, however, are likely to lead to the generation of autoantibodies. A convergent phenomenology, including distinct conformations and seeding of the anomalous form for initiation and propagation, is emerging to link knowledge in prions, prionoids, amyloids and now fibrinaloids. We here summarise the evidence for the above reasoning, which has substantial implications for our understanding of the genesis of autoimmunity (and the possible prevention thereof) based on the primary process of fibrinaloid formation.

Keywords: Long covid; ME/CFS; autoimmunity; fibrinaloid microclots.

A review of cytokine-based pathophysiology of Long COVID symptoms

Russell N Low [1], Ryan J Low [2 3], Athena Akrami [3]

Affiliations

PMID: 37064029 PMCID: PMC10103649 DOI: 10.3389/fmed.2023.1011936

Abstract

The Long COVID/Post Acute Sequelae of COVID-19 (PASC) group includes patients with initial mild-to-moderate symptoms during the acute phase of the illness, in whom recovery is prolonged, or new symptoms are developed over months. Here, we propose a description of the pathophysiology of the Long COVID presentation based on inflammatory cytokine cascades and the p38 MAP kinase signaling pathways that regulate cytokine production. In this model, the SARS-CoV-2 viral infection is hypothesized to trigger a dysregulated peripheral immune system activation with subsequent cytokine release. Chronic low-grade inflammation leads to dysregulated brain microglia with an exaggerated release of central cytokines, producing neuroinflammation. Immunothrombosis linked to chronic inflammation with microclot formation leads to decreased tissue perfusion and ischemia. Intermittent fatigue, Post Exertional Malaise (PEM), CNS symptoms with "brain fog," arthralgias, paresthesias, dysautonomia, and GI and ophthalmic problems can consequently arise as result of the elevated peripheral and central cytokines. There are abundant similarities between symptoms in Long COVID and myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome (ME/CFS). DNA polymorphisms and viral-induced epigenetic changes to cytokine gene expression may lead to chronic inflammation in Long COVID patients, predisposing some to develop autoimmunity, which may be the gateway to ME/CFS.

Keywords: COVID-19; Chronic Fatigue Syndrome; Dysautonomia; Long COVID; Myalgic Encephalomyelitis (ME); cytokines; neuroinflammation; post-acute sequelae of COVID-19.

Post-acute sequelae of COVID (PASC), usually referred to as 'Long COVID' (a phenotype of COVID-19), is a relatively frequent consequence of SARS-CoV-2 infection, in which symptoms such as breathlessness, fatigue, 'brain fog', tissue damage, inflammation, and coagulopathies (dysfunctions of the blood coagulation system) persist long after the initial infection. It bears similarities to other post-viral syndromes, and to myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome (ME/CFS). Many regulatory health bodies still do not recognize this syndrome as a separate disease entity, and refer to it under the broad terminology of 'COVID', although its demographics are quite different from those of acute COVID-19. A few years ago, we discovered that fibrinogen in blood can clot into an anomalous 'amyloid' form of fibrin that (like other β-rich amyloids and prions) is relatively resistant to proteolysis (fibrinolysis). The result, as is strongly manifested in platelet-poor plasma (PPP) of individuals with Long COVID, is extensive fibrin amyloid microclots that can persist, can entrap other proteins, and that may lead to the production of various autoantibodies. These microclots are more-or-less easily measured in PPP with the stain thioflavin T and a simple fluorescence microscope. Although the symptoms of Long COVID are multifarious, we here argue that the ability of these fibrin amyloid microclots (fibrinaloids) to block up capillaries, and thus to limit the passage of red blood cells and hence O_2 exchange, can actually underpin the majority of these symptoms. Consistent with this, in a preliminary report, it has been shown that suitable and closely monitored 'triple' anticoagulant therapy that leads to the removal of the microclots also removes the other symptoms. Fibrin amyloid microclots represent a novel and potentially important target for both the understanding and treatment of Long COVID and related disorders.

Introduction

In many cases, individuals infected with the SARS-CoV-2 virus and suffering from COVID-19 continue (or in some case begin) to display symptoms long after the acute phase. Depending on the demographics of the hosts and variant of SARS-CoV-2, these post-acute sequelae of COVID-19 (PASC [1]) may affect ∼30% of all infected individuals [2,3], are starting to be observed even in children [4,5], and are commonly known as long COVID [6–10]. Many regulatory health bodies still do not recognize this syndrome as a separate disease entity, and refers to it under the broad terminology of 'COVID'. The symptoms of long COVID are multifarious [11,12] and include breathlessness, fatigue, chest pain, myalgia, cognitive dysfunction, innate immune responses coupled to inflammatory cytokine production, and a pro-coagulant state. Our focus is on the latter.

At present there is no established treatment for long COVID (e.g. [13,14], so from a systems point of view it is important to understand which symptoms are 'primary', and which are simply secondary effects of the primary symptoms themselves. This would allow treatment strategies to focus on the primary symptoms and their causes. We here make the case (with evidence) that much of the aetiology of long COVID can be attributed to the formation of aberrant amyloid fibrin microclots, triggered in particular by the SARS-Cov-2 spike protein, and that by inhibiting the transport of erythrocytes to capillaries, and hence O_2 transfer, it is these amyloid microclots that are mainly responsible for the various long COVID symptoms observed. The microclots may also present novel antigens that lead to the production of autoantibodies, that can exacerbate symptoms further. This understanding of the role of such microclots may be expected to lead to an effective strategy for treating long COVID (and probably for other, related conditions such as myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome (ME/CFS)).

Protein conformation, prions, and amyloid structures

Classically, it was assumed that proteins folded into their conformational states of lowest free energy, because unfolded proteins typically refolded into their original forms [15]. However, the discovery of prion proteins in particular showed that this was not always the case; the more common and native form of the prion protein PrP^{C} could be converted — with no change in primary sequence — into a thermodynamically more stable, 'rogue' version referred to as PrP^{Sc} (Figure 1), and this transformation was itself catalyszd by PrP^{Sc} (e.g. [16,17]). These 'rogue' versions commonly contain a large number of ordered β-sheets in a cross-β architecture [17–23], and are referred to generally as amyloid forms. A great many proteins are now known to be able to adopt such amyloid forms, and over 50 have been implicated in a variety of diseases ('amyloidoses') [24–26]. These kinds of amyloid structures may be stained with fluorogenic dyes [27,28] such as congo red [29], thioflavin T [30–35], which is much more visible than congo red, or a variety of conjugated oligothiophenes [36] commercialized as Amytracker^{TM} dyes (e.g. [37,38]).

Amyloidogenic blood clotting

The normal blood clotting cascade is well established (e.g. [39–41] (Figure 2), with the terminal stages of both 'intrinsic' and 'extrinsic' pathways involving the self-organised polymerization of soluble fibrinogen to insoluble fibrin, catalysed by thrombin [42]. Fibrinogen, a cigar-shaped molecule of some 5 × 45 nm, is one of the most abundant proteins in plasma (commonly present at 1.5–3.5 g L^{-1} [41]).

The action of thrombin on fibrinogen leads to the removal of two small fibrinopeptides (Figure 3), and this initiates the thermodynamically favorable conversion to fibrin, first as small protofibrils and then as long fibrils, typically with a diameter of 50–100 nm. Factor XIII is a transglutaminase which inserts cross-links into the developing clot, and also serves to cross-link α2-antiplasmin (α2-AP) to fibrin. α2-AP and other similar molecules are major inhibitors of plasmin, the enzyme which is mainly responsible for clot proteolysis (fibrinolysis).

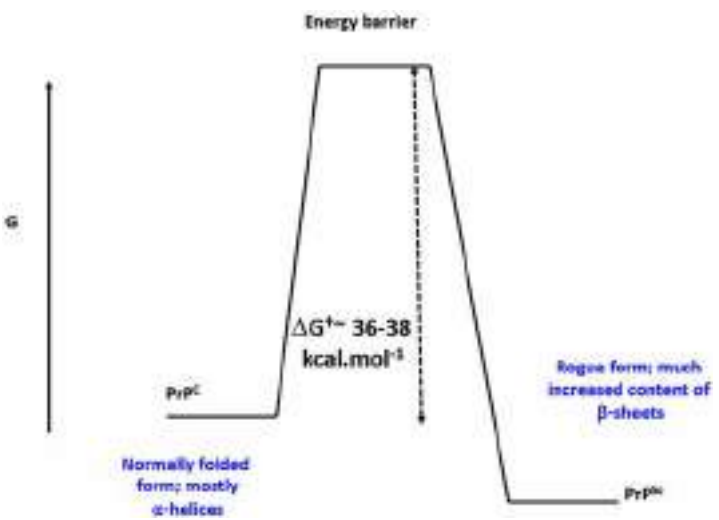

Figure 1. Many proteins can adopt more than more thermodynamically stable microstate with no change in primary structure (sequence), in which the more stable contains an ordered β-sheet 'amyloid' structure.
Normally, however, it is present in a less stable state that is kinetically more accessible during and following its synthesis. The more stable (labeled PrP^{Sc}) is separated from the initial state (PrP^{C}) via a large energy barrier. This is true for amyloid proteins generally, and is illustrated here for classical prion proteins. Redrawn from a CC-BY publication at [26].

The structure of fibrin clots is typically characterized by the diameter of the spaghetti-like fibres and by the size of the residual pores [43]. However, in some cases these spaghetti-like structures with pores are absent. We initially characterized this phenomenon, observed in the electron microscope, as 'dense matted deposits' (e.g. [44–46]). We later discovered that such structures could be induced by highly substoichiometric amounts of bacterial lipopolysaccharide (LPS) (1 molecule LPS per 100,000,000 fibrinogen molecules), and it emerged that they too were, in fact, amyloid in character [26,47–50]. This highly substoichiometric induction (of a thermodynamically favourable process) is very important, as it effectively provides a means for a massive amplification of what may be a tiny amount of trigger material.

The list of molecules that could induce this anomalous clotting, additional to the bacterial LPS that was then our main focus, included iron ions [51–56], oestrogens [46,57], lipoteichoic acid [49,52], and serum amyloid A [58].

While the list of the many other molecules that can plausibly effect this anomalous amyloid-type clotting is unclear, such clots may also be observed in the blood of individuals with inflammatory diseases such as Alzheimer's [37,50,59–61], Parkinson's [37,48], type 2 diabetes [37,38,62–64], and rheumatoid arthritis [65–68]. Similar phenomena have also been observed in the pregnancy disorder pre-eclampsia [69], where there is also strong evidence for a microbial component [70,71].

Although this was a novel finding for 'normal' blood, it had previously been shown that β-sheet structures could be induced in fibrin artificially by mechanical means [72]. There have also been rare reports (see [26,73,74]) of amyloidogenic mutations (alleles) in the fibrinogen Aα chain. Additionally, it has long been known that aged fibrin deposits can bind amyloid dyes in tissue sections [75] and that fibrin-derived peptides can form cross-beta structures [76]. The amyloid form of the prion protein is highly resistant to proteolysis (resistance to proteolysis by proteinase K is used in an assay for PrP^{Sc} [77–79]), and so this provided a ready explanation for the different nature and persistence of the amyloid fibrin clots [52].

A note on 'amyloid' terminology

We recognize that there has occasionally been confusion in our use of the term 'amyloid' to describe amyloidogenic blood clotting, as blood is not seen as a source of the classical amyloidoses. While we could have used another term, the structures and staining of these blood clot fibres, presumably consisting of the ordered β-sheet architectures necessary (i) to bind fluorogenic amyloid stains and (ii) to be resistant to the normal sources of proteolysis, do reflect the well-established term 'amyloid'. In addition, there is a very simple discrimination between 'classical' amyloids and those fibrin-rich amyloids that are our focus here: this is that the amyloid fibrils seen in classical amyloidoses tend to be ca 5–25 nm or so in diameter [21,22,80,81] whereas those in fibrin amyloid microclots tend to be in the range 50–150 nm or even more. They are thus easily distinguished microscopically, even without the greater analytic power afforded by proteomics [82], antibody staining [83], and so on. However, to avoid such ambiguity in the future, we consider it sensible to refer to the kinds of fibrin-based amyloids we are speaking about as fibrinaloids.

Amyloid fibrin microclots (fibrinaloids) in COVID-19 and long COVID

Coagulopathies [84–102], and especially the formation of extensive microclots in vivo, are a hallmark of both COVID [85,103–115] and long COVID [116,117], and we have demonstrated that these microclots too are amyloid in character [108,109,116]. Importantly, the addition of purified, recombinant SARS-CoV-2 S1 spike protein to coagulation-competent normal plasma is sufficient to induce the formation of anomalous clots [118] that adopt amyloid states that are also resistant to fibrinolysis [108]. Note that the observations of the microclots in (platelet-poor) plasma are performed without the addition of exogenous thrombin; they are naturally there in the circulation of patients with both acute and long COVID. The size of these amyloid microclots, that can be observed microscopically and stained e.g. with thioflavin T [108,109,116] (Figure 4; control vs LC plasma), are typically anywhere from 1–200 μm; this means that they can effectively block up, and inhibit blood flow through, all kinds of microcapillaries, thereby strongly lowering the availability of oxygen in tissues. As expected, they consist mainly of fibrin, but also contain many other proteins, including α2-antiplasmin [108] (and even the virus itself [119]). They also have heightened pro-inflammatory activity and elicit fibrin autoantibodies [118] (and maybe others). Elements of at least some spike protein variants of SARS-CoV-2 can also stimulate (in silico) the amyloidogenic aggregation of serum amyloid A [120]. More generally, there is considerable evidence for the induction of amyloid production by amyloidogenic proteins by viruses such as those of the Herpesviridae family, e.g. in Alzheimer's disease [121–125].

'Ground-glass' opacities in COVID and long COVID

One of the early hallmarks of acute COVID-19 was the observation of extensive, diffuse opacities in high-resolution computed tomography (HRCT) scans of the lungs of patients, consistent with the breathing difficulties widely observed. These opacities resembled ground glass [126], and indeed are commonly referred to as 'ground-glass opacities' (GGO) [127–132]. They are largely formed of fibrin, though we are not aware that anyone has yet stained them for amyloid structures (which is what we believe they must be, and there is ample precedent for this in other diseases (e.g. [133–136])). In COVID patients they persist well beyond the acute phase [137].

More on the size and properties of microclots

As mentioned, the fibrinaloid microclots that we observe are typically in the range 1–200 μm on their longest axis. This is consistent with the 'ground glass' appearance, It is also true for 'artificial' amyloid-type protein structures [28], and for the kinds of amyloid seen as deposits in thrombotic microangiopathies [138–142]. However, the size distribution differs markedly between individuals (Figure 4), and while hard to pin down it does provide a ready general explanation for the very different manifestations of Long COVID (including suggestions that the term covers 'multiple' diseases). This is also true for prion diseases, where specific 'strains' based on particular conformations can propagate in the same form. In some cases, there can be differential staining of individual amyloids by different dyes [26,49,143–145], which also allows a certain degree of differentiation of the structure of the clots. In the case of Long COVID, we are probably not quite ready for such subtleties.

Role of D-dimer

A major marker for fibrinolytic activity (Figure 2) is a polypeptide referred to as D-dimer Figure 5. It is a strong prognostic indicator for disease outcome (survival) in acute COVID [85,146–154]. It is, in effect, a composite measure of how much fibrinogen there was, how much was converted to fibrin clots (whether normal or fibrinaloids), and how much these then went on to be lysed. Each of these general steps may of course be regulated independently (i.e. proceed at a 'fast' or slow' rate, as encoded simplistically in Figure 6), so the analysis of D-dimer measurements must take all of these issues into account. Thus high levels of D-dimer must of necessity represent the production of many more clots (and sufficient fibrinolysis to be occurring) but cannot of themselves reflect how many remained after their lysis nor which of them were 'normal' and which amyloid (see Figure 7 for a simplified pathway explanation).This explains why D-dimer levels are significantly raised following infection with many of the earlier variants of SARS-CoV-2, which produce multiple fibrinaloid microclots and Long COVID. However, D-dimer is massively increased in the case of the omicron variant where much clotting takes place but seemingly not to a fibrinaloid form, and thus effective clot fibrinolysis takes place. That there may be strong dependencies on the precise variant is not really surprising (omicron differs from both alpha and delta variants by more than 20 mutations [155], more than enough to vary a protein's activity 1000-fold in typical directed evolution experiments [156]). High D-dimer thus may, but does not have to [157], reflect disease severity given a particular SARS-CoV-2 variant; it depends on the context, and in particular the type of fibrin that can serve as the substrate for its production.

Assessment of clotting

Why TEG rather than APTT, INR and other clotting measures?

A variety of optical clotting tests are in more-or-less common usage [158]. These include the aPTT (activated partial thromboplastin clotting time), prothrombin time (PT) and International normalized ratio (INR), but they are considered to have limited predictive value for bleeding and are not cost-effective [159,160]. INR and APTT are of limited value to predict clotting (and identifying patients that will bleed) in patients with acute and Long COVID. The test uses platelet poor plasma after discarding the cellular component of blood (including the platelets).

As blood clots, the viscosity of the clot increases, and measuring the time-dependent rate and extent of this viscoelasticity change directly in whole blood provides a more comprehensive and convenient in vitro assessment of the clotting behavior of the blood at the time. Note that clots of fibrinaloid that have already formed are effectively inert and invisible to such methods. Here the method of choice is known as Thromboelastography (TEG) [48,52,56,58,59,65,66,108,109,161–165] (or a related version known as ROTEM [166–173]). Figure 8 shows stylized traces of TEG, as typically found in health and disease. There are three main generalized traces: healthy (normocoagulable), hypercoagulable (as commonly seen in acute COVID-19) and hypocoagulable (during bleeding risk).

The TEG is a well-known point-of-care method, lately suggested as a good method for following blood clotting status in acute COVID-19, especially when anticoagulation regimes are prescribed to patients [109]. However, in our experience, it is not useful for determining (hyper)coagulation status in Long COVID, and should be reserved for those Long COVID patients where there is either a bleeding concern or actual bleeding. TEG should then be used in conjunction with platelet and microclot mapping, to follow patients closely when bleeding might be expected. Because microclots already contain clotted plasma proteins, and TEG only measures unclotted (soluble) plasma proteins, the TEG might not be suitable to determine the actual existing coagulation status (consisting of both clotted and soluble plasma proteins).

TEG trace ranges might in fact be within normal ranges, and our take on this is that the fibrin inside the microclots has already been coagulated, and trapped inside the microclots, leaving only a lower amount of soluble fibrinogen that might partake in the TEG assay. Therefore both the already-coagulated fibrin in the microclots and the soluble fibrinogen levels should in fact be considered, and preferably measured. Unfortunately the TEG cannot do that. However, we consider that TEG is vital for assessing the potential for coagulation when Long COVID patients are treated with anticoagulation therapy, or in any individual undergoing treatment designed to lower the levels of fibrinaloid microclots. In our view, TEG is therefore a much more true evaluation of the patient's coagulation state, as it uses whole blood, thus bringing in the very important role played by platelets.

INR, APTT D-dimer, fibrinogen levels and platelet count may be of help in the very late event of end stage acute COVID-19, where acute disseminated intravascular coagulopathy (DIC)-coagulopathy is seen. Interestingly, it is now accepted that DIC-bleeding events are uncommon in acute COVID-19 [111]. Even in this event, TEG is still of more use to manage this situation [109].

Mechanical properties of amyloid microclots

While we do not yet know the details of the mechanical properties of the fibrin amyloid microclots, it is known that amyloid fibrils can typically exhibit unusually high mechanical strength and resistance to deformation (e.g. [174–177]. The stiffness also increases with the thickness of the fibres [178]. This implies strongly that the fibrinaloids are likely to be more prone to 'getting stuck' in capillaries.

Bradford Hill criteria and microclots

The Bradford Hill criteria for causation of a disease Y by an environmental factor X [70,179] represent a useful framework for assessing the role of fibrin amyloid microclots in Long COVID, and are as follows: (1) strength of association between X and Y, (2) consistency of association between X and Y, (3) specificity of association between X and Y, (4) experiments verify the relationship between X and Y, (5) modification of X alters the occurrence of Y, and (6) biologically plausible cause and effect relationship. We think that the evidence is very strongly consistent with these criteria when X is represented by microclots and Y by Long COVID and potentially a variety of other conditions.

Ability of amyloid microclots to explain the symptoms of long COVID

While long COVID is a multi-system disorder with multiple symptoms of varying severity, it remains possible that there is in fact a particular major underlying cause (or that a very small number are the main contributors). Our view is as follows: given that amyloid microclots can clog up capillaries and inhibit the transport of O_2 to tissues, this alone can in fact more or less self-evidently serve to explain a great many observations, and in particular the symptoms of both acute and long COVID. These obviously include breathlessness due to low O_2 directly, and thrombotic events such as acute myocardial infarction [180,181], stroke [181–183], etc due to the microclots. The lack of O_2 transport to tissues explains straightforwardly how a nominally respiratory disease also leads to the dysfunction of organs such as the kidney [184,185], PoTS (postural tachycardia syndrome [186]), myalgia in skeletal muscle [187,188], neurological disorders [189], and lactic acidosis [190,191] (the mass of lactate is too low to have been detected in our own COVID untargeted metabolomics experiments [192]), and potentially the benefits of hyperbaric O_2 therapy [193]. It is also worth stressing that amyloid structures themselves tend to be cytotoxic, often via membrane disruption [194–198].

What makes long COVID long?

For any deterministic system to change its behavior there has to be a change of its parameters [199]. In the case of long COVID we need mechanisms that can explain how something that was initiated a long time ago can somehow persist. One source of the continuous production of a stimulus is represented by microbes, including virions, that persist in a largely dormant state (often in intracellular reservoirs) but can occasionally continue to replicate [1,200]. There is now considerable evidence for the persistence of SARS-CoV-2 [201]. Another is the continued release of sequestered microbially derived substances than can act as stimuli for continuing microclot formation. Here, the finding [202] that S1 spike protein can itself persist in $CD16^+$ Monocytes in PASC for up to 15 months post-infection is highly relevant, as the amplification of trigger proteins to make microclots as part of the clotting mechanism means that miniscule (and highly substoichiometric) amounts of suitable triggers can suffice [26,47]. This alone is sufficient to account for the chronic nature of such diseases.

Microclot sequestration of biomarkers

An extra consequence of the production of microclots that sequester other proteins whose concentration would otherwise appear elevated is that those proteins do not then appear in plasma from which the microclots have been removed (e.g. by centrifugation), and thus they do not manifest, and cannot usefully be used, as biomarkers. Thus, our experience [108,116] is (i) that many such proteins including α2-AP and autoantibodies are so sequestered, and (ii) that the degradation of these protease-resistant microclots for classical proteomic analyses requires multiple rounds of trypsinization.

The role of autoantibodies and biomimicry

Autoantibodies are a feature of many chronic, inflammatory diseases, such as rheumatoid arthritis [68] (where Proteus spp are strongly implicated and where the cross-reactive epitopes leading to 'mimicry' by and of host protein targets are understood [68,203,204]). Importantly, it has already been shown that both acute [205,206] and Long COVID [207] are accompanied by immunological dysfunction, and by novel antibodies [1,206], including in the latter case to (an 'abnormal' but unspecified form of) fibrin [118]. We recognise that any change in the conformation of a protein can result in the generation of novel epitopes that can thereby lead to the production of novel antibodies; indeed the use of secondary antibodies in the detection of small molecules [208] relies precisely on this fact. Although we consider that the more primary event is the generation of fibrinaloid microclots, we also recognise that they are likely to be able to change the natural conformation of many proteins that might normally present as harmless (seen as 'self'). However, the detailed nature of these autoantibodies is not known (but a subject of considerable present interest [1]).

Epidemiological aspects

One approach to understanding the mechanisms of long COVID is to analyse epidemiological data, since the characteristics of those experiencing acute COVID differ markedly from those with long COVID [11]. Among these (and in significant contrast with the case of acute COVID [209]), is a striking over-representation of long COVID in women, and especially younger women [3,10,210]. From this point of view, it is of considerable interest that female sex hormones can induce anomalous blood clotting [46,57,211].

Haemophiliacs (and others with hypocoagulatory disorders) represent a complex test case, because depending on the stage of the disease [85], COVID can be both hyper- and hypocoagulatory [212]. However, we are not presently aware of any analyses of fibrinaloid microclots in such individuals.

Strain differences

While it has been somewhat slowed by the generally sluggish recognition of Long COVID, it is to be expected that different strains of SARS-CoV-2 may have different tendencies to induce it. To this end, it is reasonable that if microclots are important to LC their prevalence should also vary with the severity or frequency of LC induced by different strains of SARS-CoV-2. In a sense this would provide a very important kind of 'control', since the only thing varying as the stimulus is the strain of SARS-CoV-2.

Other causes of amyloid microclots

While we here focus on SARS-CoV-2, we note that all kinds of molecules have been shown to affect the extent of fibrinaloid clot formation, including iron, other amyloids, bacterial cell wall components, etc., and that we have observed them in a variety of chronic, inflammatory diseases including Alzheimer's [37,50,60–62], Parkinson's disease [37,48], Type 2 diabetes [37,38,62,63,213,214] (where the amyloid protein amylin [215–217] is of course a well-known player) and rheumatoid arthritis [65,67]. Although not yet tested directly, we consider it likely that this will also be true for infectious diseases known to be causing similar post-infection syndromes, such as Dengue [218–220], Ebola [221–223], Lyme [224], Zika and others where viruses persist and can cause microangiopathies [139] that we suspect are also amyloid in character. There is also likely to be a role for molecules raised in pre-existing inflammatory diseases, as well as substances produced by dyregulation microbiomes [225], and Leiden factor V [226,227].

Similarities to ME/CFS

As well as the post-infection diseases referred to above, the emergence of long COVID has brought to the fore its similarities to other even more widely established syndromes such as myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome (ME/CFS) [1,228], and full details are available in these recent reviews [1,228]. Berg and colleagues have also highlighted the role of coagulopathies in ME/CFS [229]. We note, too, that other 'anomalous' diseases bearing symptoms that overlap with those of ME/CFS include Gulf war syndrome [230], where again we would hazard that the analysis of fibrinaloid microclot formation would have a positive outcome. Thus, while we consider it likely that the phenomena we describe will also broadly be true for ME/CFS, we focus here on PASC/Long COVID.

Endotheliopathy

An important component of severe acute COVID-19 disease accompanying pathological clotting, is virus-induced endotheliopathy resulting in systemic endotheliitis [111,231–235]. Endotheliitis is central to initiating a state of failing normal clotting physiology and it is also known to be significantly linked to coagulopathies, as it activates microthrombotic pathways and initiates endotheliopathy-associated intravascular microthrombi [236].

A role for iron dysregulation

A consequence of cell death, such as occurs in endotheliopathy, is the release in COVID patients of the normally intracellular iron storage protein ferritin [237,238], which can then release free iron [239]. Iron dysregulation is an accompaniment to a huge number of chronic, inflammatory diseases [200,240,241], and iron dysregulation is a significant accompaniment in COVID [238,242–245]. Indeed, there is evidence that SARS-CoV-2 can release iron from haemoglobin directly [246]. The involvement of iron dysregulation would be consistent with the potentially protective effects of chelating it, e.g. with lactoferrin [247–250] or other chelators [251–254].

Role of platelets

The important role that platelets play in acute COVID-19 (Figure 9), has been discussed in the context of disease severity, the development of endotheliopathy and as general drivers of coagulation pathology [232,233,255–257]. Platelets interact with circulating inflammatory molecules, the (damaged) endothelium itself, and also with immune cells, resulting in platelet/cellular and platelet/molecule complexes [258,259]. Platelet complexes are mediated by membrane-membrane interactions via receptor binding. Two of the molecules central in this discussion are fibrinogen and VWF, and platelets form significant complexes with them both [260]. Ultimately, platelet–cell and platelet–coagulation molecule protein complexes form part of platelet activation mechanisms and vascular remodeling and these complexes drive granule secretion, surface glycoprotein expression, and molecular activation platelet hyperactivation pathways [258,259].

Consequences for treatment protocols

Given that there is a definite background removal rate of fibrinaloid microclots, albeit slower than that of normal non-amyloid clots, it is then mostly necessary to ensure that they do not form further. Consequently, we do not see a role for 'clot-busters' as have occasionally been used when acute COVID-19 is accompanied by

Figure adapted from [259]. Various platelet receptors can mediate binding to viral particles, where pattern recognition receptors recognize viral signals, viral products and also modulate platelet function. Platelets mediate viral attack by secreting virucidal proteins and by engulfing viral particles, as well as by interacting with immune cells and enhancing the immune response. Virus-platelet aggregates and platelets with a viral load are targeted by leukocytes, and platelets are ultimately cleared from the circulation (Figure created with https://biorender.com/).

Acute Respiratory Distress Syndrome [261]. However, addressing only one of the pathologies (either clot pathologies or platelet hyperactivation) will always tend to fail, as was also noted in recent clinical trials where just one of the two therapies was trialed in Acute COVID-19. Lawler and co-workers [262] investigated the use of therapeutic anticoagulation with heparin in noncritically ill patients with COVID-19. (We note too that heparin, like lactoferrin [250], may have antiviral properties [263–266].) Lopes and coworkers [267] also investigated the use of therapeutic versus prophylactic anticoagulation for patients admitted to hospital with COVID-19. Earlier, Viecca and colleagues reported [268] on a single-center, investigator-initiated, proof-of-concept, case control, phase IIb study. The study [268] explored the effects of anti-platelet therapy on arterial oxygenation and on clinical outcomes in patients with severe COVID-19 with hypercoagulability. Outcomes were not significantly positive in any of the trials mentioned.

However, it must be noted that the trials were done on acute COVID-19 patients. This has led us to suggest a multipronged approach and a regime of triple anticoagulation treatment [231], where Long COVID patients might be treated by one month of dual antiplatelet therapy (DAPT) (Clopidogrel 75 mg/Aspirin 75 mg) once a day, as well as a direct oral anticoagulant (DOAC) (Apixiban) 5 mg twice a day, together with a proton pump inhibitor (PPI) (e.g. pantoprazole 40 mg/day for gastric protection). Such a treatment regime showed promise under condition of clinical practice (there were no treatment-free 'controls') [231]. However, especially because of the potential for hypocoagulation (bleeding), it must only be followed under strict and qualified medical guidance in which we recommend the regular assessment of coagulation status before and during treatment. It (as do any other methods [269]) now needs to be studied in a proper randomized controlled trial.

We do note that the use of triple therapy is not new in clinical practice. Its uses predate COVID-19, where it is successfully prescribed in patients where thromboses (which may or may not involve fibrinaloid clots) are particularly worrisome and in various coronary diseases accompanied by atrial fibrillation. Here strong anti-coagulant treatments tailored to the needs of the individual patient are recommended [270], commonly involving dual or triple treatments with various anticoagulant agents. The present authors have focused on the 'triple treatment' for anticoagulation that involves an oral anticoagulant plus two drugs designed to decrease platelet activation (usually the $P2Y_{12}$ inhibitor clopidogrel, plus low-dose aspirin). (In addition, a gastric proton pump inhibitor is also given to reduce the likelihood of gastric bleeding.)

What is needed next?

Many pieces of research-level evidence (especially [85,101,106,108,109,116,231,271]) suggest strongly that fibrin amyloid microclots, driven by the presence of the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein, are an inevitable accompaniment to (and a likely cause of) Long COVID. A biologically coherent explanation [272,273] can link such observations with the other observable symptoms of Long COVID, and thus serve to satisfy the logic normally required [179,274,275] to provide a causative explanation.

However, we are still potentially far from translating this kind of understanding into both diagnostics and therapeutics. Some of the elements that are needed both to make the evidence even more robust and to pass regulatory approval more widely include the following:

- Our fibrin amyloid diagnostic methods, presently semi-quantitative, must be subject to further optimization, made robust and quantitative, and reproduced more widely
- Work is required to provide a simple, cheap and widely available point-of-care instrument to effect the necessary measurements of the number, size and nature of fibrinaloid micrclots

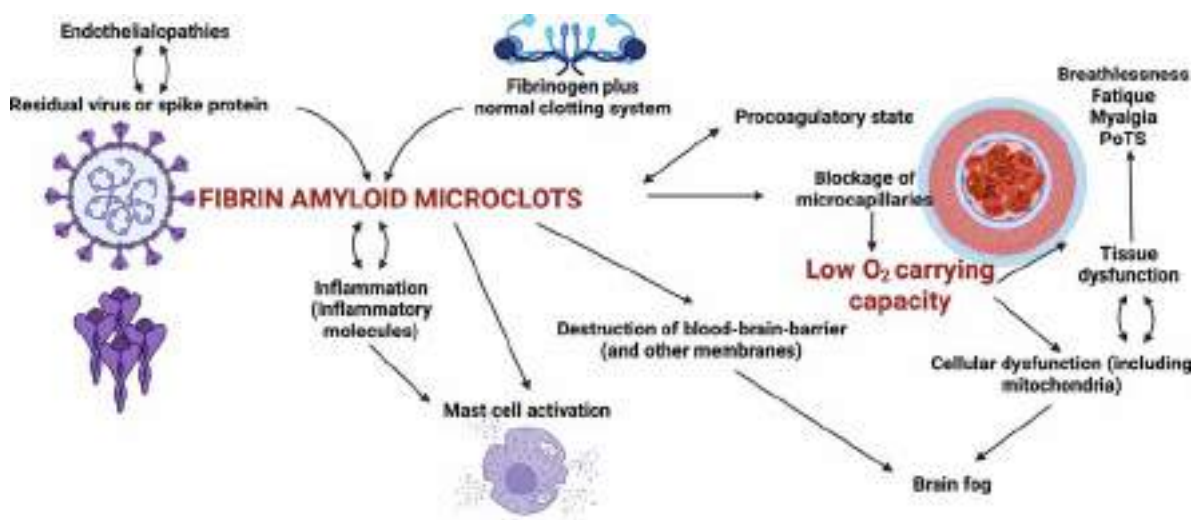

Figure 10. Some of the sequelae of fibrinaloid microclot formation in the symptomology of Long COVID.
Many others, such as a role for auto-antibodies, are not shown.

- Longitudinal studies, and those relating fibrinaloid presence to the severity of Long COVID, will help recognise the role of different fibrinaloids in causing different symptoms; these may vary predictively between SARS-CoV-2 strains
- There would be value in assessing other blood parameters simultaneously (e.g. fibrinogen, D-dimer, von Willebrand Factor) plus suitable inflammatory cytokines
- Armed with the above, we should reasonably expect clinicians to be able to obtain ethics for a suitable designed Randomized Controlled Trial of anticoagulant and platelet inhibitor regimes, coupled to the assessment, using viscoelastic assays such as Thromboelastography (TEG or ROTEM or Sonoclot), before and during such treatments of coagulation potential so as to guard against any hypocoagulation and the dangers of bleeding.
- Such individuals should be followed for a period after the end of treatment to assess the degree of permanence

Of course it is easy to design detailed and expensive trials, accompanied by a great many other measurements of covariates, but the above sets out what we would consider as the minimum necessary to strengthen the claims that the analysis and removal of fibrin amyloid microclots should have major utility in providing substantial benefits to those with Long COVID, and likely in related conditions as well.

Conclusions

Here we have argued, and focus on the fact, that Long COVID is characterized by the presence of persistent fibrin amyloid microclots that might block capillaries and inhibit the transport of O_2 to tissues, entrapping numerous inflammatory molecules, including those that prevent clot breakdown (as we have indeed recently shown) (Figure 10).

In addition to microclot formation, significant platelet dysfunction and a systemic endotheliitis drive systemic cellular hypoxia. These pathologies can explain most, if not all, of the lingering symptoms to which individuals with long COVID refer. We have noted that amyloid microclots, platelet hyperactivation and endothelial dysfunction, might form a suitable set of foci for the clinical treatment of the symptoms of long COVID [231]. Therefore, if fibrinaloid microclots are largely responsible for the symptoms of Long COVID, their removal is to be seen as paramount for relieving these symptoms and allowing the body to repair itself.

Abstract

Unprecedented worldwide health catastrophe due to the COVID-19 pandemic has ended up resulting in high morbidity and mortality rates. Even though many people recover from acute infection, there is rising concern regarding post-COVID-19 conditions (PCCs), often referred to as post-acute sequelae of SARS-CoV-2 infection (PASC) or "long COVID." The respiratory, cardiovascular, neurological, and endocrine systems are just a few of the many organ systems that can be impacted by this multifarious, complicated illness. The clinical manifestations of long COVID can vary among individuals and may include fatigue, dyspnea, chest pain, cognitive impairment, and new-onset diabetes, among others. Although the underlying processes of long COVID are not fully understood, they probably involve unregulated immune response, persistent generation of pro-inflammatory cytokines (chronic inflammation), autoimmune-like reactions, persistent viral replication, and micro-clot formation. To create successful treatments and care plans, it is essential to comprehend the immunological mechanisms causing these difficulties. The pathogenesis of long COVID should be clarified and potential biomarkers to help with diagnosis and treatment should be sought after. To reduce the burden of long COVID on people and healthcare systems around the world, the need for long-term monitoring and management of long COVID problems should be emphasized. It also underscores the significance of a multidisciplinary approach to patient care. The goal of this review is to carefully evaluate the clinical signs and symptoms of long COVID, their underlying causes, and any potential immunological implications.

Abstract

Post-acute COVID-19 (PACS) are associated with cardiovascular dysfunction, especially postural orthostatic tachycardia syndrome (POTS). Patients with PACS, both in the absence or presence of POTS, exhibit a wide range of persisting symptoms long after the acute infection. Some of these symptoms may stem from alterations in cardiovascular homeostasis, but the exact mechanisms are poorly understood. The aim of this study was to provide a broad molecular characterization of patients with PACS with (PACS + POTS) and without (PACS-POTS) POTS compared to healthy subjects, including a broad proteomic characterization with a focus on plasma cardiometabolic proteins, quantification of cytokines/chemokines and determination of plasma sphingolipid levels. Twenty-one healthy subjects without a prior COVID-19 infection (mean age 43 years, 95% females), 20 non-hospitalized patients with PACS + POTS (mean age 39 years, 95% females) and 22 non-hospitalized patients with PACS-POTS (mean age 44 years, 100% females) were studied. PACS patients were non-hospitalized and recruited ≈18 months after the acute infection. Cardiometabolic proteomic analyses revealed a dysregulation of ≈200 out of 700 analyzed proteins in both PACS groups vs. healthy subjects with the majority (> 90%) being upregulated. There was a large overlap (> 90%) with no major differences between the PACS groups. Gene ontology enrichment analysis revealed alterations in hemostasis/coagulation, metabolism, immune responses, and angiogenesis in PACS vs. healthy controls. Furthermore, 11 out of 33 cytokines/chemokines were significantly upregulated both in PACS + POTS and PACS-POTS vs. healthy controls and none of the cytokines were downregulated. There were no differences in between the PACS groups in the cytokine levels. Lastly, 16 and 19 out of 88 sphingolipids were significantly dysregulated in PACS + POTS and PACS-POTS, respectively, compared to controls with no differences between the groups. Collectively, these observations suggest a clear and distinct dysregulation in the proteome, cytokines/chemokines, and sphingolipid levels in PACS patients compared to healthy subjects without any clear signature associated with POTS. This enhances our understanding and might pave the way for future experimental and clinical investigations to elucidate and/or target resolution of inflammation and micro-clots and restore the hemostasis and immunity in PACS.

Fibrinaloid Microclots and Atrial Fibrillation

Abstract

Atrial fibrillation (AF) is a comorbidity of a variety of other chronic, inflammatory diseases for which fibrinaloid microclots are a known accompaniment (and in some cases, a cause, with a mechanistic basis). Clots are, of course, a well-known consequence of atrial fibrillation. We here ask the question whether the fibrinaloid microclots seen in plasma or serum may in fact also be a cause of (or contributor to) the development of AF. We consider known 'risk factors' for AF, and in particular, exogenous stimuli such as infection and air pollution by particulates, both of which are known to cause AF. The external accompaniments of both bacterial (lipopolysaccharide and lipoteichoic acids) and viral (SARS-CoV-2 spike protein) infections are known to stimulate fibrinaloid microclots when added in vitro, and fibrinaloid microclots, as with other amyloid proteins, can be cytotoxic, both by inducing hypoxia/reperfusion and by other means. Strokes and thromboembolisms are also common consequences of AF. Consequently, taking a systems approach, we review the considerable evidence in detail, which leads us to suggest that it is likely that microclots may well have an aetiological role in the development of AF. This has significant mechanistic and therapeutic implications.

Abstract

The prevailing hypotheses for the persistent symptoms of Long COVID have been narrowed down to immune dysregulation and autoantibodies, widespread organ damage, viral persistence, and fibrinaloid microclots (entrapping numerous inflammatory molecules) together with platelet hyperactivation. Here we demonstrate significantly increased concentrations of von Willebrand factor (VWF), platelet factor 4 (PF4), serum amyloid A (SAA), α-2 antiplasmin (α-2AP), endothelial-leukocyte adhesion molecule 1 (E-selectin), and platelet endothelial cell adhesion molecule (PECAM-1) in the soluble part of the blood. It was noteworthy that the mean level of α-2 antiplasmin exceeded the upper limit of the laboratory reference range in Long COVID patients, and the other 5 were significantly elevated in Long COVID patients as compared to the controls. This is alarming if we take into consideration that a significant amount of the total burden of these inflammatory molecules has previously been shown to be entrapped inside fibrinolysis-resistant microclots (thus decreasing the apparent level of the soluble molecules). We conclude that presence of microclotting, together with relatively high levels of six biomarkers known to be key drivers of endothelial and clotting pathology, points to thrombotic endothelialitis as a key pathological process in Long COVID.

Long COVID has a multifactorial nature with multiple pathophysiological factors at play.

Viral factors, host factors (including systemic inflammation, and metabolic, endocrine, and endothelial dysfunction) and downstream impacts (tissue damage from the initial infection, hypoxia, dysbiosis, and autonomic nervous system dysfunction) are key elements underpinning the condition.

Various factors culminate in the long-term persistence of the disorder (i.e., a thrombotic endothelialitis characterized by endothelial inflammation, hyperactivated platelets, and fibrinaloid microclots).

We suggest a multipronged treatment agenda for Long COVID treatment trials, incorporating drugs targeting all potential mechanisms, including viral persistence, autoimmunity, immune dysregulation, and gut dysbiosis; with endothelialitis and coagulation abnormalities as two priorities.

Abstract

Acute COVID-19 infection is followed by prolonged symptoms in approximately one in ten cases: known as Long COVID. The disease affects ~65 million individuals worldwide. Many pathophysiological processes appear to underlie Long COVID, including viral factors (persistence, reactivation, and bacteriophagic action of SARS CoV-2); host factors (chronic inflammation, metabolic and endocrine dysregulation, immune dysregulation, and autoimmunity); and downstream impacts (tissue damage from the initial infection, tissue hypoxia, host dysbiosis, and autonomic nervous system dysfunction). These mechanisms culminate in the long-term persistence of the disorder characterized by a thrombotic endothelialitis, endothelial inflammation, hyperactivated platelets, and fibrinaloid microclots. These abnormalities of blood vessels and coagulation affect every organ system and represent a unifying

Introductory overview and classification of Long COVID

Coronavirus disease (COVID-19) is an airborne infectious disease caused by the severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 (SARS-CoV-2) [1]. It has had a disastrous effect on the world's demographics, resulting in more than 6.5 million deaths worldwide [2]. It represents the worst global health crisis since the influenza pandemic of 1918 [2]. Since the WHO declared a global pandemic, COVID-19 has overwhelmed and crippled healthcare systems around the world.

Most people infected with the virus will experience a mild to moderate illness and recover without specialized treatment [3]. Common symptoms of acute COVID-19 include profound fatigue, breathlessness, cough, chest pain, palpitations, headache, joint pain, myalgia, weakness, insomnia, pins and needles, hair loss, impaired balance, neurocognitive issues including memory and concentration problems, anxiety, depression, and loss of taste and smell [4]. However, some sufferers have experienced more serious complications, such as coagulopathy, thromboembolism, multiorgan failure, septic shock, and death [3].

While symptoms usually only last for up to 2–3 weeks, ~10% of patients experience continued or new symptoms beyond the acute phase; this condition is known as Long COVID/post-acute sequelae of COVID-19 (PASC) [5]. Hereafter, we refer to the illness by the patient-defined term 'Long COVID' [6]. In this condition, there may be persistence of symptoms of acute COVID, or the appearance of new symptoms unrelated to the acute illness. In some cases, the 'acute' phase may have been almost asymptomatic. Depending upon the weeks [4,7]. Persistence of symptoms has now been observed for up to 3 years [8,9].

Here, we shed light on the various pathophysiological factors that contribute to Long COVID and highlight the resultant blood abnormalities. The first three sections examine the prevalence and manifestations, risk factors and predictors, and subtypes of Long COVID. We also briefly discuss the effects of vaccination in the context of Long COVID. Following this, we discuss the pathophysiological factors that can contribute to Long COVID and the symptoms that ensue. This section is divided into three parts: viral factors, host factors, and downstream impacts. To provide a comprehensive picture of how these factors contribute to abnormal coagulation, the next section outlines the interplay between systemic inflammation and coagulation. We summarize findings that point to a failed fibrinolytic system [1,8,10–12]. Finally, we discuss in detail the abnormalities of coagulation observed in Long COVID.

Prevalence and manifestations of Long COVID

Long COVID has resulted in a major global health and economic burden, with at least 65 million individuals around the world having Long COVID [13]. In the USA, economists have estimated that Long COVID will incur cumulative future costs of more than US$4 trillion [14].

Approximately 87% of people who recover from COVID-19 and are discharged from hospital exhibit at least one symptom of Long COVID after 60 days, 32% have one or two symptoms, whereas 55% have three or more [15,16]. The most common symptoms are fatigue (53.1%), shortness of breath (43.4%), joint pain (27.3%), and chest pain 21.7% [15]. Other less prevalent symptoms include cough, skin rashes, palpitations, headache, and ‘pins and needles’ sensations. Research has shown that the most common Long COVID symptoms are addition, 50% of people with Long COVID meet the criteria for myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome (ME/CFS) [17–19].

Many patients struggle to do basic daily activities and experience a wide range of secondary mental health issues. In a large global survey of 3762 patients with Long COVID across 56 countries, approximately half were unable to work full-time 6 months post infection, primarily due to fatigue, postexertional malaise, and cognitive dysfunction [20].

Children of all ages can also develop Long COVID. Surveys demonstrate that they experience the full range of symptoms seen in adults [21–23]. Notable manifestations in children include brain hypometabolism, hepatic involvement, ME/CFS, and pulmonary abnormalities [21,24,25].

Risk factors and predictors of Long COVID

Various risk factors influence the precise presentation of Long COVID in a particular patient. The number and type of symptoms during the initial infection are strong predictors of Long COVID. Those who experience more than five symptoms during the first week of infection are more likely to develop Long COVID, irrespective of age or gender [26–28]. Specific symptoms during the first week that are predictive of Long COVID include fatigue, headache, shortness of breath, and muscle pains [27,28]. Other risk factors for Long COVID include age (47% risk in those 50 years and above), and comorbidities such as hypertension, dyslipidemia, cardiovascular disease, and metabolic and endocrine dysregulation [e.g., body mass index (BMI) >30, and type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM)] [8,29,30]. Women have greater prevalence, lower mortality, lower levels of inflammation, higher lymphocyte counts, and faster antibody responses compared with men [31]. This suggests that male sex is an independent risk factor for COVID-19 infection and death, but not for Long

Subtypes of Long COVID: implications for treatment

Although millions of people are living with symptoms of Long COVID, what remains striking is the heterogeneity of the clinical syndrome [34]. This is due, in part, to the fact that the term encompasses many different clinical conditions with distinct pathobiological processes at play. Over time, the groups that advocated for the creation of the terms ‘Long COVID’ (patient created), ‘Long Haul COVID’ (patient created), ‘Post-Acute Sequelae of COVID-19’ (National Institutes of Health and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention) and ‘Post-COVID-19 Condition’ (WHO) have reached a level of tacit agreement that these terms are, in fact, describing the same broad clinical presentation: namely, any person who has survived an acute SARS-CoV-2 infection but is still experiencing persistent symptoms months after their acute symptoms have resolved. We continue to use the name ‘Long COVID’ in this paper because it is the most widely used patient-derived term, although we acknowledge that these other terms broadly describe the same disease.

One of the first distinctions that clinicians and researchers evaluating patients with Long COVID must establish is whether the symptoms can be linked to organ dysfunction that is evident from mainstream clinical investigations. For instance, consider a hypothetical patient hospitalized for a severe COVID-19 pneumonia. This patient may continue to experience shortness of breath, chest pain, and exertional intolerance for months after the initial infection, meeting criteria for a diagnosis of Long COVID. If these impairments are accompanied by clear changes in pulmonary function testing and pulmonary fibrosis on imaging, then it is possible that this patient will have a positive response to traditional pulmonary rehabilitation efforts. By contrast, consider a second hypothetical patient who was infected with SARS-CoV-2, but experienced less-severe illness that did not require hospitalization. Following resolution of the acute COVID-19 symptoms, this patient goes on to develop extreme fatigue, near normal) and do not correlate with symptom severity. In these cases, as we have learned from other postviral illnesses, such as ME/CFS, interventions including pulmonary rehabilitation are likely to significantly worsen symptoms due to PESE [17,35–37]. Therefore, there is a critical need to create diagnostic criteria and biomarkers that can assist in differentiating the different endotypes of Long COVID to ensure that precision medicine approaches can be applied to each endotype. Here, we propose a naming convention that seeks to better identify those with ‘Syndromic’ or ‘Non-Syndromic’ Long COVID, acknowledging that some patients may exhibit elements of both and must be managed accordingly.

In addition to identifying different endotypes of Long COVID, care must also be taken to avoid a misdiagnosis of Long COVID when a patient is simply experiencing a long-tail recovery from COVID-19 (Figure 1). The initial clinical case definition offered by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in the USA stated that a Long COVID diagnosis should be considered if symptoms are persisting beyond 1 month of the initial infection[ii,iii]. However, the WHO clinical case definition differs by recommending consideration of the diagnosis if symptoms persist beyond 3 months of the initial infection [38]. Although cases of prolonged recovery to COVID-19 can closely resemble a diagnosis of Long COVID, given time the former will gradually and spontaneously recover. This is not the pattern for Long COVID.

Patients with Non-Syndromic Long COVID may have had a severe acute infection that resulted in hospitalization and caused significant organ damage and dysfunction. This subtype may respond well to traditional interventional approaches, such as pulmonary rehabilitation. By contrast, patients with Syndromic Long COVID might have had a mild acute infection that did not require hospitalization, but develop extreme fatigue, shortness of breath, chest pain, and exertional intolerance. This subtype tends to not respond well to conventional treatments. Within this subtype, certain pre-existing chronic

Finally, the interaction of COVID-19 with pre-existing complex chronic illness results in a potentially distinct set of endotypes of Long COVID. For instance, emerging evidence suggests that individuals with pre-existing immune issues and chronic viral infections and reactivations are more susceptible to Long COVID [39,40]. However, what remains unclear is whether these individuals are experiencing an infection-triggered worsening of their pre-existing diagnosis and pathophysiology, or the same condition as the rest of the population with Syndromic Long COVID. Thus, the interaction of Long COVID with pre-existing complex chronic illness is an area that requires active investigation so that all patients with a Long COVID diagnosis can access evidence-based, precision medicine approaches.

Vaccination and Long COVID

Studies looking at the impact of vaccination on the likelihood of developing Long COVID have yielded conflicting results. A recent systematic review suggested that, overall, vaccination is associated with a reduced risk of Long COVID, with two doses conferring greater protection than one [41]. However, there are also studies showing no reduction in the risk of Long COVID following vaccination [42]. Research looking at the impact of vaccination on existing Long COVID has also yielded varying results, with improvement, no change, and worsening all being reported [41,43]. These inconsistent results could partly be due to heterogeneity of study design, inclusion criteria, and the definition used of Long COVID [13].

An additional consideration is the varying impact of vaccination on the risk of

Download PDF

COVID compared with double-vaccinated individuals with Delta [44]. We still do not fully understand the interplay between multiple infections with different variants and multiple, sometimes different, vaccines administered to an individual patient.

The benefits of vaccination far outweigh any pitfalls. However, similar to any other vaccine, indeed any other drug, COVID-19 vaccination can, in some cases, result in significant adverse effects (vaccine injury) [45][ii]. The presentation can be very similar to Long COVID[iv]. As with virus-induced Long COVID, the mechanisms involved are not fully defined; coagulopathy may be one potential explanation, because the spike protein has been shown to bind to fibrinogen in vitro, giving rise to anomalous fibrin microclots [10]. However, there may be other factors at play that are yet to be defined. Unfortunately, there is hesitancy among patients and researchers to acknowledge and openly discuss vaccine injury, due to fear of being labeled 'anti-vax'[iv]. Patients with vaccine injury should be able to access medical care without fear of being stigmatized, and vaccine injury should be researched like any other disease. This will facilitate the development of better vaccines and help us identify those at higher risk of an adverse event.

Pathophysiology of Long COVID

Viral factors

Viral persistence

Viruses (and indeed bacteria [46]) can be present in a chronically lytic and/or latent form in the host after the initial phase of infection [47–52]. Persistent infections are characterized as those in which the microbe and/or its fragments are not cleared from the host following primary infection [51]. Certain viruses, such as varicella-zoster virus (VZV), HIV, hepatitis C virus (HCV), Epstein–Barr

Download PDF

There is growing evidence that, in some patients with Long COVID, SARS-CoV-2 may persist in tissue reservoirs after acute infection [47–51,53]. These hidden viral reservoirs may trigger repeated immune responses that contribute to persistent symptoms. Months after infection, viral mRNA and spike protein from SARS-CoV-2 have been detected in the digestive system and urinary tract of patients with Long COVID [54] through immunofluorescence and PCR analysis of intestinal biopsies. Other studies have also detected SARS-CoV-2 in multiple organs and in feces, indicating prolonged viral shedding [55–57].

The main virulence factor of SARS-Cov-2, the spike protein, is a key element for viral attachment to target cells through angiotensin-converting 2 enzyme (ACE-2) surface receptors [58], TMPRSS-1 receptors, and extracellular vimentin [10,59]. Spike proteins are class I viral fusion proteins that are present as protruding homotrimers on the viral surface; they facilitate virus entry into target host cells [60,61]. An isolated spike protein is between 180 and 200 kDa in size and contains an extracellular N terminus, a transmembrane domain fixed in the membrane of the virus, and a short intracellular C-terminal segment [60,62]. The S1 subunit permits receptor binding to the host cell [63], whereas the S2 subunit enables viral fusion and entry [64]. However, receptor binding alone does not solely explain the cell-mediated pathologies present in the disease [65].

Spike protein can be shed by the host cell itself via extracellular vesicles (EVs) and spread via the circulatory system to distant tissues and organs [64]. EVs are bilayer lipid membrane-bound structures released from host cells, such as neutrophils, monocytes, lymphocytes, platelets, epithelial cells, and endothelial cells (ECs), under physiological and pathological conditions [64]. These vesicles may contain biologically active compounds, such as mRNA, miRNAs, DNA, lipids, and assorted proteins. The main function of these EVs is to transport cargo to neighboring or distant cells to support homeostasis [66]. Extracellular

Once the spike protein has attached to the host cell and replication is complete, SARS-CoV-2 buds in the endoplasmic reticulum–Golgi intermediate compartment (ERGIC) or in the Golgi apparatus (Figure 2). Finally, SARS-CoV-2 can exit the cell via a biosynthetic secretory pathway [68,69]. In Long COVID, SARS-CoV-2 may hide in these EVs and reattack various tissues and organs through the circulatory system. This may contribute to the symptoms of Long COVID [67].

(1) SARS-CoV-2 enters host cells through angiotensin converting enzyme 2 (ACE2) and transmembrane protease serine 2 (TMPRSS2) receptors, as well as extracellular vimentin. Reactivation of latent viruses

It is well understood that, as with dormant bacteria [46,70], humans can harbor dormant viruses that persist in a latent form without causing pathology [49]. These dormant viruses may reactivate under conditions of stress or immunosuppression [20,49,71]. If the immune response is weakened, challenged, or dysregulated, these dormant viruses may become reactivated and alter human gene expression, protein production, and immune regulation [49]. This sequence of events allows the virus to infect new body sites and drive new chronic symptoms. This has also been demonstrated during and after COVID-19 infection, where previously dormant viruses, such as EBV, herpes simplex virus, and HCV, are reactivated in various organs [49,72,73]. These mellitus (T1DM), and may be one explanation for why some patients develop chronic conditions after COVID-19 infection [49].

Bacteriophage-like actions of SARS-Cov-2

Previously, it was assumed that SARS-CoV-2 can only replicate and survive in mammalian eukaryotic cells. However, it has recently been suggested that SARS-CoV-2 can infect and replicate in gut bacteria, indicating that the virus could act in a sense as a bacteriophage [74]. This could result in a particular and potent type of viral persistence, and may also partly explain the gut dysbiosis seen in patients with Long COVID, because the bacteriophagic action of SARS-Cov-2 can directly promote the replication of certain bacteria, causing an imbalance in the gut microbiota [74]. This may further contribute to the chronic inflammation, endothelial dysfunction, and hypercoagulation seen in Long COVID.

Host factors

Chronic inflammation and immune dysregulation

In response to the virus in acute COVID-19, the immune system stimulates polyclonal T cell activation and the release of different inflammatory molecules, such as cytokines, interleukins, and chemokines [75,76]. This event is known as a cytokine storm [75,77], and is a distinct immunopathological feature of COVID-19. As the cytokine storm intensifies, high levels of inflammatory molecules, such as serum amyloid A (SAA), von Willebrand factor (VWF), interleukin (IL)-6, IL-8, IL-10, and tumor necrosis factor alpha (TNF-α) are increased drastically [75].

It has also been shown that severe COVID-19 causes B cell and T cell lymphocyte deficiency, otherwise known as lymphopenia [78]. This can in turn cause hyperinflammation [78,79], because lymphocytes participate in the which may further contribute to the chronic immune activation in Long COVID [82].

Autoimmunity

Bacterial and viral infections have been identified as a key environmental trigger in the pathophysiology of autoimmune diseases. Different mechanisms for the generation of autoimmunity following infections have been proposed. These may include epitope spreading, bystander activation, molecular mimicry, and activation of antigen-presenting cells [83]. For instance, T1DM has been associated with coxsackievirus [84] and enteroviruses [85]. HCV has been postulated to be associated with systemic lupus erythematosus [56,86], while molecular mimicry of Proteus spp. antigens is closely involved in the pathology of rheumatoid arthritis [87,88].

Evolving data suggest that autoimmunity contributes to the pathophysiology of SARS-CoV-2 infection, both during the acute illness and in Long COVID. For instance, similar to pre-eclampsia [89], antiphospholipid autoantibodies have been detected in 52% of serum samples of hospitalized patients; this directly correlates with neutrophil hyperactivity and more severe clinical outcomes [90]. Numerous studies have also identified autoantibodies against interferons, neutrophils, and cyclic citrullinated peptides [90–93].

Functional autoantibodies targeting G-protein-coupled receptors (GPCR-AAbs) have also been demonstrated in the sera of patients with COVID-19; these are associated with disease severity [94–96]. In a pilot study, the neutralization of GPCR-AAbs improved capillary impairment and fatigue after COVID-19 infection [97].

body systems. Unregulated release of chemical mediators produces a multitude of symptoms, including food allergies, urticaria, gastrointestinal upset, shortness of breath, and wheezing, all of which are reported in Long COVID [99]. The proposed mechanisms whereby MCAS is triggered in Long COVID include dysregulation of genes by SARS-CoV-2, resulting in the loss of genetic regulation of mast cells, as well as development of autoantibodies which react with immunoglobulin receptors on mast cells [100,101].

Melatonin deficiency

Melatonin is a sleep hormone with several attributes that help combat viral infection. It has been shown that melatonin effectively subdues an overactive innate immune response, thereby downregulating inflammation [102,103]. It also endorses the adaptive immune reaction, resulting in enhanced antibody formation, thereby inhibiting the entrance of viruses into cells and limiting their replication [102]. This has also been demonstrated in acute SARS-CoV-19 infection, where patients with higher levels of melatonin had lower mortality [102]. It could be argued that if a patient has melatonin deficiency, they may be at increased risk of developing Long COVID. Based on the results of previous studies of melatonin in other viral infections, as well as its role in a variety of chronic inflammatory diseases [104], it could be used to help prevent and treat COVID-19 and Long COVID [105].

Connective tissue abnormalities

As mentioned previously, various autoantibodies have been found in the systemic circulation of patients with Long COVID. In fact, connective tissue disorders, such as arthritis, lupus, and myositis, have been reported after COVID-19 [106]. These may be precipitated by autoantibodies attacking connective tissue and muscle [106]. In those with Ehlers–Danlos syndrome (EDS) and hypermobility spectrum disorder (HSD), the high levels of inflammation present in Long COVID may result in increased connective tissue manifest, for example, with an ME/CFS-like picture due to cranio-cervical instability.

Downstream impacts

Tissue damage due to initial COVID-19 infection

Given that SARS-CoV-2 is airborne, it was anticipated at the beginning of the pandemic (and found) that lung injury would be common in patients. However, an unforeseen complication of the virus was the multiorgan impairment that it caused [107]. Structural brain and metabolic abnormalities were reported among survivors of COVID-19, which were directly associated with ongoing neurological symptoms, such as memory loss, anosmia, and fatigue [107,108]. Cardiac abnormalities and myocardial inflammation were observed in 78% of participants who were discharged from hospital, indicating cardiac injury [109]. Other radiological abnormalities were observed in the lungs, liver, pancreas, kidneys, and spleen persisting for a minimum of 2–3 months after hospital discharge [107,110–112].

While the initial acute infection can cause severe tissue and organ damage, this does not fully explain the diverse abnormalities seen in Long COVID. There is mounting evidence that the organ involvement seen in COVID-19 occurs due to spread of the virus by the oro-systemic route [113]. Virus contained in the mouth may spread to different organs through the blood. The distribution of the illness in the organs lends weight to this argument. For example, abnormalities in the lungs are predominantly seen in the peripheral and basal regions, reflecting the areas that are most perfused but least aerated [113]. The most aerated areas (the apices) are spared, which is against spread by inhalation from the upper airway. It is likely that, once the virus has found its way into the organs, it stimulates microvascular in situ thrombosis, leading to the multiple clinical features and radiological appearances of acute COVID [114]. Continuation of Autopsy results of lungs from individuals deceased from COVID-19 have shown significant pulmonary vascular changes, extensive endothelial damage, and thrombosis [115]. The extent of pulmonary vascular shunting in patients with COVID-19 is strongly correlated with poor oxygenation of blood passing through the lungs [116]. The resultant systemic arterial hypoxemia can cause tissue hypoxia throughout the body [117,118]. Under these hypoxic conditions, immune cells may be triggered to produce inflammatory cytokines, which may further intensify capillary dysfunction. Not only does hypoxia in the lung indirectly cause tissue hypoxia across the entire body, but SARS-CoV-2 may also bind to ECs across various tissue types, altering cell morphology and inducing ECs to undergo apoptosis. For instance, in the heart, endothelial dysfunction is associated with EC swelling in small arterioles, capillaries, and venules, as well as scattered necrosis of individual myocytes [119]. In the brain, infection of the microvascular endothelium in the subcortical white matter is associated with microscopic ischemic and hemorrhagic lesions [120].

Due to the chronic inflammatory milieu in Long COVID, neutrophils may cause capillary obstruction, which can stall blood flow. This happens because neutrophils are larger than erythrocytes and the average capillary diameter; thus, when excessively activated, they can obstruct capillary flow [121]. It has been demonstrated that neutrophil adhesion in brain capillaries may impair brain function and can produce a substantial decline in cerebral blood flow in animal models [122]. In Long COVID, neutrophil degranulation is upregulated, suggesting continued inflammatory responses and immune dysregulation even after acute COVID [123]. Therefore, as seen in acute COVID, the adhesion of hyperactivated neutrophils to capillaries within the lungs, brain, heart, and other organs may contribute to the symptoms seen in Long COVID [124].

Patients with Long COVID may present with fibrin amyloid microclots that promote tissue hypoxia and impaired oxygen exchange [1,8,12,125]. These known as ischemia–reperfusion injury [125]. This process involves the production of reactive oxygen species (ROS), which increase oxidative stress [126,127]. Oxidative stress refers to an imbalance between the rate of production of ROS and reactive nitrogen species and their elimination via antioxidants [125]. Oxidative stress is known to promote the production of inflammatory cytokines, and vice versa, producing a vicious cycle [125,128,129]. If this persists and is not treated appropriately, tissue hypoxia may linger for months and contribute to the multitude of symptoms seen in Long COVID [1,8,12,125].

Since a previous review [125] covered this in some detail for both acute and Long COVID, we review only briefly some of the evidence for tissue hypoxia, which includes low venous saturation [130], heart rate variability, markers of oxidative stress continent on hypoxia, lactate accumulation [131,132], biomarkers of ischemia–reperfusion injury, poor oxygen transfer [112], as well of the benefits of therapies designed to alleviate tissue hypoxia [125]. Overall, we would regard the breadth and extent of such evidence as both mechanistically integrated and compelling.

SARS-CoV-2 interactions with the host microbiome

Several studies suggest that COVID-19 promotes microbiome/virome dysbiosis that could result in persistent symptoms. One study revealed that the microbiome in the bronchoalveolar fluid of patients with COVID-19 showed increased pathogenic bacteria and higher levels of oral and upper respiratory commensal bacteria compared with healthy controls [133]. Furthermore, the gut microbiome of patients with COVID-19 is characterized by the augmentation of opportunistic pathogens and the reduction of beneficial species [134].

blood, where their presence can contribute to a range of systemic inflammatory processes. This can result in endothelial damage and hypercoagulation [135].

Autonomic nervous system dysfunction

Symptoms consistent with dysautonomia are commonly reported by patients with Long COVID. Although the rate of formal diagnosis of autonomic dysfunction varies widely [137–140], it is a significant cause of symptom burden for patients with Long COVID and consensus guidelines for management have been developed [37]. Patients with Long COVID display high rates of symptoms consistent with dysautonomia, such as orthostatic intolerance, fatigue, palpitations, cognitive impairment, nausea, and temperature dysregulation [34,141]. Data on heart rate variability (HRV), which is a measure of parasympathetic nervous system health, have demonstrated that patients with Long COVID have a lower HRV compared with matched controls [142].

There are multiple potential causes for dysautonomia in Long COVID:

- Relative hypovolemia due to failure of peripheral vasoconstriction is a feature of both postural orthostatic tachycardia syndrome (POTS) and orthostatic hypotension (OH) [143,144]; this causes reduced stroke volume and cardiac output, resulting in impaired tissue oxygen supply. This can result in a compensatory sympathetic overdrive and tachycardia.
- Cerebral hypoperfusion: a recent series of nine patients with Long COVID demonstrated that orthostatic intolerance, cerebral hypoperfusion (as measured by transcranial Doppler ultrasound) and dysautonomia [as measured by the Quantitative Scale for Grading of Cardiovascular Autonomic Reflex Tests and Small Fibers from Skin Biopsies (QASAT) score] were present in all patients regardless of whether they met criteria for POTS or OH [145]. This is also consistent with studies of impaired cerebral perfusion in ME/CFS [146–148]. Therefore, a reliance on criteria for POTS and OH is likely to miss many cases of dysautonomia in Long COVID.

the condition [150–152]. We suggest that SFN in Long COVID results from autoantibodies [153] (which have previously been associated with POTS and OH) [154–158] or from ischemia of small fibers due to microclots.

- Damage due to direct infection or inflammation: SARS-CoV-2 is known to infect and produce its RNA and spike proteins widely in both the peripheral and central nervous system [159]. Damage associated with past infection, or persistent infection of the vagus or trigeminal nerves, may be a driver of dysautonomia symptoms [160,161].

Interaction between systemic inflammation and coagulation

The processes of systemic inflammation and hypercoagulation are interdependent, as demonstrated by the interactive crosstalk between these systems. Under normal physiological conditions, these systems function as protective mechanisms and are closely regulated. Dysregulation may occur within these systems as a result of chronic systemic inflammation and thrombotic complications. When a pathogen invades the host, or if tissue injury occurs, an inflammatory response is elicited to eliminate the insult and promote healing and tissue repair. However, if the inflammatory process is not properly resolved, acute inflammation may transition to a chronic state. The coagulation cascade can be activated due to the consequent increase in proinflammatory cytokines.

An important molecule in the context of inflammation-induced coagulation is tissue factor (TF) [162]. The tenase complex, comprising TF and factor VIIa, activates the extrinsic coagulation pathway, resulting in the generation of thrombin. Toward the end of the coagulation cascade, thrombin catalyzes the conversion of soluble fibrinogen to insoluble fibrin. Proinflammatory cytokines can upregulate the expression of TF [163]. In addition, chronic systemic inflammation promotes the suppression of certain anticoagulant mechanisms, including the antithrombin and protein C pathways [164,165]. Likewise, fibrinolytic activity may be suppressed due to a rise in PAI-1 levels [166–168] fueled by proinflammatory molecules [165]. In summary, chronic systemic inflammation may alter the hemostatic balance to a prothrombotic state [169].

activated endothelium and induce the synthesis and expression of cell adhesion molecules [170,171]. These molecules have a critical role in the extravasation of leukocytes to sites of inflammation. Moreover, activated coagulation factors can also provoke an inflammatory response by interacting with immune cells to induce the production of inflammatory cytokines [172,173].

Platelets also have a role in regulating and facilitating inflammation. Inflammatory molecules can bind to specific receptors on platelets and activate them to release their granular content, which comprises procoagulant and proinflammatory molecules. Platelets are also implicated in the recruitment of leukocytes and the regulation of vascular permeability [174].

Abnormalities of coagulation in Long COVID

Fibrinaloid microclots

The processes of normal blood clotting are well established. The terminal steps involve the self-assembly of fibrinogen molecules that have been cleaved by thrombin into long fibers [175,176]. It has been established that blood sometimes clots into anomalous forms, previously referred to as ‘dense matted deposits’; these anomalous microclots are resistant to fibrinolysis (proteolysis) [177]. It was subsequently recognized that this anomalous form was in fact amyloid in character [178]. These fibrinaloid microclots or fibrin(ogen) aggregates have also been reported in the plasma of patients with T2DM [179], ME/CFS [180], acute COVID-19 [1,181,182], and Long COVID [1,8,10–12]. These microclots, along with hyperactivated platelets, are likely to be contributing to the thrombotic and systemic inflammatory manifestations of these diseases.

It has also been demonstrated that the isolated SARS-CoV-2 spike protein S1 effects without being taken up by cells [10]. Figure 4 shows representative micrographs of purified fluorescent fibrinogen with added thrombin after exposure to spike protein. Here, we can see dense fibrin clots forming (green, fluorescent signal) in the presence of spike protein. In platelet-poor plasma (PPP) with and without thrombin, the green fluorescent Thioflavin T (ThT) signal indicates areas of amyloid deposit formation. Microfluidics demonstrate that spike protein can generate a disorderly clotted mass when added to PPP (Figure 5) [10]. The microclots cover most of the channel and often protrude into the center of the flow channel, thereby disrupting flow [10]. Aside from the fact that the SARS-CoV-2 S1 spike protein can directly induce the formation of fibrinaloid microclots in healthy PPP samples, these microclots have also been observed in patients with acute COVID-19 or Long COVID. The microclots are very resistant to digestion protocols [177,178]. Amyloid protein structures are known to be naturally recalcitrant to proteolysis [178]. However, by way of contrast, microclots in T2DM (and the few that may be present in plasma samples of healthy participants), degrade with standard protein digestion protocols [1].

platelet factor 4 (PF4), serum amyloid A (SAA), various fibrinogen chains, as well as numerous antibodies [1,8,12].

If the coagulopathy during the acute phase of the disease is not adequately treated, the resulting impaired oxygen exchange and tissue hypoxia may linger for months [116]. This may explain the multiorgan manifestations of Long COVID. [1,8,12]. Figure 6 illustrates the presence of fibrinaloid microclots and hyperactivated platelets in patients with Long COVID.

Platelets are fundamental to blood clotting and directly interact with red blood cells and the vascular endothelium. When platelets are hyperactivated, as displayed by the arrows, this promotes blood clotting and the attachment of microclots to the endothelium. The fluorescent marker, Thioflavin T, binds to misfolded protein and causes the microclots to fluoresce green. These large microclots (>10 μm) may cause severe pathology and block capillaries. Reproduced from [1,8].

Dysregulated coagulation due to endothelial damage and dysfunction

Recent research has shown that endothelial inflammation, otherwise known as endothelialitis, in COVID-19 may have long-term consequences for vascular function [18]. Endothelial damage and dysfunction are observed in Long COVID and have been shown to be strong correlates of the disease [183]. Certain EC biomarkers, such as VWF and Factor VIII, are significantly elevated in patients recovering from COVID-19. Eight months after mild-to-moderate COVID-19 infection, other endothelial markers, such as ET-1 and angiopoietin-2, were dysregulated in patients with Long COVID [18].

In acute COVID-19, it has already been established that endothelial dysfunction and impairment of the microcirculation are present [184,185]. SARS-CoV-2 directly impairs vascular homeostasis by infecting ECs via the ACE-2 receptor [185]. The Ang II hyper-reactivity that this provokes leads to a flare of inflammation and progression of fibrosis [186]. Upregulated inflammatory mediators within the endothelial matrix also indirectly contribute to endothelialitis and EC injury [187].

connexin channels and upstream vascular smooth muscle cells. In addition, the capillary endothelium is protected by a glycocalyx matrix that acts as a fluid barrier; elevated inflammatory mediators in Long COVID may cause shedding of this glycocalyx, causing profound changes in microvascular resistance and capillary hemodynamics [102].

The vascular endothelium serves as a central interface between inflammation and coagulation, with a crucial role in the regulation of two systems. Under normal physiological conditions, the intact endothelium has anti-inflammatory properties and expresses anticoagulant proteins [188,189]. However, in Long COVID, it is hypothesized that cryptic SARS-Cov-2 reservoirs and various inflammatory molecules bind to receptors on ECs [190]. This may cause the endothelium to become activated and to upregulate the expression of cell adhesion molecules, such as ICAM-1, VCAM-1, selectins (E-selectin and P-selectin), inflammatory mediators, and procoagulant factors, while weakening the expression of anticoagulant factors [10]. Cytokines can also directly stimulate TF and the formation of neutrophil extracellular traps (NETs) to induce thrombosis [191,192]. Additionally, the inflamed endothelium promotes adhesion and hyperactivation of platelets [193]. SARS-Cov-2 can also directly bind to platelets via the ACE2 and TMPRSS2 receptors to promote platelet activation, adhesion, and aggregation, thereby causing increased coagulation [194]. Moreover, platelets can also become hyperactivated due to upregulation of inflammatory and adhesion molecules.

Autopsy studies have revealed the extensive effects of SARS-CoV-2 infection on ECs., including endothelialitis, endothelial damage, capillary inflammation, and thrombosis [183]. Endothelial damage may increase cell permeability and leukocyte adhesion while inhibiting anticoagulant properties. Previous studies showed that antithrombin III, tissue factor pathway inhibitor, and activated protein C (APC) are significantly decreased in the context of endothelial surface, promoting neutrophil recruitment that may contribute to thrombosis [197].

Dysregulated coagulation due to viral persistence

As previously mentioned, SARS-CoV-2 may hide in EVs to reattack various tissues through the circulatory system. Apart from their important function as transporters, EVs also have a vital part in inflammation, coagulation, and immune regulation. It has been demonstrated that extracellular vesicle-TF (EV-TF) activity is significantly upregulated in patients hospitalized with COVID-19. Furthermore, TF-positive EVs are released into the circulation, which may lead to thrombosis [198]. In addition, previous studies have demonstrated that PS exposure in the outer membrane of the cell membrane due to viral infection may also promote activation of coagulation [199]. PS is a membranous phospholipid normally found in the inner membrane of a double cell membrane. When vascular ECs and circulating blood cells are damaged, the lipid distribution is altered in the membrane and PS moves from the inner to the outer membrane. When PS is exposed in the outer cell membrane, it creates a catalytic surface for clotting factors, which facilitate the conversion of prothrombin to thrombin [200]. In addition, PS externalization in patients with COVID-19 is strongly associated with increased D-dimer levels and patients with thrombosis have significantly higher PS externalization compared with patients without thrombosis [201]. This further implies that EVs may carry SARS-CoV-2 to distant tissues, reinjuring the vascular endothelium. Figure 7 illustrates how EVs may promote endothelial damage and platelet hyperactivation and subsequently cause abnormal coagulation.

receptors, it causes endothelial dysfunction and platelet hyperactivation. This may lead to phosphatidylserine (PS) exposure in the outer cell membrane. PS exposure can directly promote certain factors within the coagulation cascade, such as tissue factor (TF). TF is also a complex with FVIIa, and provides binding sites for procoagulant complexes, leading to the formation of thrombin. Thrombin is the final step in the coagulation cascade, which promotes conversion of fibrin to fibrinogen, causing blood coagulation. Furthermore, endothelial damage and PS exposure also causes endothelial cells and platelets to further produce various cytokines, resulting in chronic systemic inflammation. Cytokines can also directly stimulate TF within the coagulation cascade as well as the formation of neutrophil extracellular traps (NETs) to induce thrombosis. SARS-CoV-2 persistence promoting chronic inflammation in Long COVID may be a mechanism that stimulates endothelial cells, platelets, and other inflammatory cells. This promotes the upregulation of procoagulant factors within the coagulation cascade and, ultimately, the formation of fibrinaloid microclots that are resistant to fibrinolysis. Figure created with BioRender (https://biorender.com/).

Dysregulated coagulation due to autoimmunity

Autoantibodies that promote thrombosis have recently been recognized as an important factor in Long COVID [202]. Antiphospholipid (APL) antibodies, in particular, promote thrombosis by stimulating neutrophils to release NETs and by activating ECs and platelets [73,202]. It was previously also shown that APL antibodies can directly cause endothelial damage by binding to receptors on ECs [203]. When APL antibodies bind to these receptors on the endothelial wall, they inhibit nitric oxide synthase (NOS) production, thereby decreasing the production of NO [204]. NO is known for its anti-inflammatory and vasodilatory properties. The reduction in NO production may contribute to endothelial vascular integrity and increased platelet aggregation, causing hypercoagulation [205]. Therefore, it is not surprising that markers of endothelial activation/damage, such as VWF, have been shown to correlate with disease severity in Long COVID [206].

Dysregulated coagulation due to chronic hypoxia and persistent inflammation

Hypoxia is a condition in which sufficient oxygen is not available to tissues to support satisfactory homeostasis [207]. This can result from insufficient oxygen delivery to the tissues and organs (due to low blood supply or low oxygen content within the blood), and increased tissue oxygen demand. The response and tolerance to hypoxia is variable; while some tissues/organs can tolerate some forms of hypoxia for a longer period, other tissues may be seriously damaged.

Chronic hypoxia within tissue may also promote hypercoagulation. It may trigger transcription factor early growth response-1, upregulate TF expression, and promote the expression of PAI-1, thereby increasing coagulation [208]. Chronic hypoxia can also promote apoptosis of ECs. This reduces endothelial anticoagulant properties, vascular permeability, leukocyte adhesion, and microparticle production [208].

Chronic inflammation in Long COVID can also stimulate ECs, platelets, and inflammatory cells to produce inflammatory cytokines and procoagulant factors [8]. This chain of events can damage the protective function of the vascular endothelium, consequently causing abnormal coagulation [208].

Priorities

In this review, we have described the multiple pathophysiological factors at play feature of COVID-19 disease. In fact, we would argue that, while there may be many mechanisms at play in the pathogenesis of Long COVID, a dominant pathological process driving symptom burden is a thrombotic endothelialitis. This induces a systemic prothrombotic state with the formation of anomalous circulating fibrinaloid microclots and hyperactivated platelets, driven by elevated levels of procoagulant inflammatory molecules, which interact with each other as well as with platelets and the endothelium.

Several studies have demonstrated a significant increase in the incidence of thromboembolic phenomena after COVID-19 infection [209–211]. A study of the electronic health records of 48 million adults across England and Wales revealed that, in the week following acute COVID-19, the adjusted hazard ratios for first arterial thrombosis and first venous thrombosis were 28.7 and 33.2 times, respectively that of those with no COVID-19 diagnosis. While the risk diminished over time, it remained elevated up to 49 weeks after diagnosis [211]. An analysis of 11.7 million US Veterans' health records, including over 153 000 who had acute COVID-19 infection, revealed a significantly increased risk of adverse cardiovascular outcomes, including thrombosis-related diseases, such as myocardial infarction, acute coronary syndrome, pulmonary embolism, and stroke at 1 year [212]. The hazard ratio remained elevated in 'mild' cases and in younger patients with no underlying health issues.

Despite the extensive body of research into the condition, there are currently no validated evidence-based treatments for Long COVID. There clearly needs to be further research into the pathophysiological mechanisms; however, given the scale and debilitating nature of the condition, this should not delay good-quality trials of candidate treatments. High caliber research can (and should) be accelerated; this was demonstrated during the first year of the pandemic with trials, such as RECOVERY, which identified effective treatments for acute COVID-19 [213]. A recent comprehensive review of Long COVID identified exclusion criteria for studies; appropriate representation of disadvantaged groups; and patient engagement at all stages of research, beginning with study design [13].

There needs to be a multipronged treatment agenda for Long COVID treatment trials, incorporating drugs targeting all potential mechanisms, including viral persistence, autoimmunity, immune dysregulation, and gut dysbiosis. However, given the pathophysiology of the disease and the clearly increased risk of thrombotic events, attention needs to be paid to the endothelialitis and coagulation abnormalities as a priority. There are promising pilot data for improvement in symptoms and endothelial function with the drug sulodexide [214]. Initial observational experience with triple anticoagulant therapy to address the anomalous clotting is also encouraging [8]. A pilot study of the drug Pycnogenol® demonstrated improvements in endothelial function, microcirculation, inflammatory molecules, oxidative stress, and symptoms [215]. For any of these drugs to be adopted widely, these results need to be replicated further in randomized controlled trials. Finally, heparin-induced extracorporeal lipoprotein (HELP) apheresis has been proven to reduce hypercoagulability and inflammatory molecules in cardiovascular disease; while there is potential for its use in Long COVID [216], the treatment is expensive and not widely accessible, and so far there are no objective data of its efficacy in Long COVID.

In parallel with treatment trials, it is necessary to develop validated, accessible methods for detecting and tracking endothelialitis, microclots, and platelet hyperactivation to aid diagnostics and monitor response to treatment (see Outstanding questions). The currently available techniques are expensive and not readily available in clinical settings [1,183,217].

The ongoing search for definitive treatment options does not mean that nothing can be done to help patients in the meantime. There is plenty that clinicians can offer. In the first instance, care must be taken to 'do no harm' by determining graded exercise therapy (GET) or cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT). These treatments have been shown to be harmful and/or ineffective and several guidelines explicitly advise against them [36,218]. Once the patient has been subtyped, symptomatic treatment should be offered depending on the presentation [13], such as antihistamines for MCAS [219], and cardiac rate-limiting medication for dysautonomia [37,220]. The response to therapy should be reviewed on a regular basis, with treatments titrated/stopped/substituted as appropriate.

Concluding remarks

Long COVID is a multisystem disease with debilitating symptoms, which has had a profound impact on society and the global economy. There are several potential pathophysiological mechanisms, some of which may be causative and others likely to be epiphenomena. These include viral factors, host factors, and downstream impacts. These mechanisms interact with the vascular endothelium to induce a persistent thrombotic endotheliopathy with systemic hypercoagulability. This may promote the formation of fibrinaloid microclots, platelet hyperactivation, and endothelial dysfunction, which can lead to various clotting pathologies. Currently, there are no definitive treatments for the condition. There is a pressing need for randomized placebo-controlled trials of therapeutics targeting the dysregulated coagulation and endotheliopathy, especially given the increased long-term risk of thromboembolic outcomes (see Outstanding questions).

Abstract

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis/Chronic Fatigue Syndrome (ME/CFS) is a frequent, debilitating and still enigmatic disease. There is a broad overlap in the symptomatology of ME/CFS and the Post-COVID-19 Syndrome (PCS). A fraction of the PCS patients develop the full clinical picture of ME/CFS. New observations in microvessels and blood from patients suffering from PCS have appeared and include microclots and malformed pathological blood cells. Capillary blood flow is impaired not only by pathological blood components but also by prothrombotic changes in the vascular wall, endothelial dysfunction, and the expression of adhesion molecules in the capillaries. These disturbances can finally cause a low capillary flow and even capillary stasis. A low cardiac stroke volume due to hypovolemia and the inability of the capacitance vessels to adequately constrict to deliver the necessary cardiac preload generate an unfavorable low precapillary perfusion pressure. Furthermore, a predominance of vasoconstrictor over vasodilator influences exists, in which sympathetic hyperactivity and endothelial dysfunction play a strong role, causing the constriction of resistance vessels and of precapillary sphincters, which leads to a fall in capillary pressure behind the sphincters. The interaction of these two precapillary cardiovascular mechanisms causing a low capillary perfusion pressure is hemodynamically highly unfavorable in the presence of a primary capillary stasis, which is already caused by the pathological blood components and their interaction with the capillary wall, to severely impair organ perfusion. The detrimental coincidence of microcirculatory and precapillary cardiovascular disturbances may constitute the key disturbance of the Post-COVID-19 syndrome and finally lead to ME/CFS in predisposed patients because the interaction causes a particular kind of perfusion disturbance-capillary ischemia/reperfusion-which has a high potential of causing mitochondrial dysfunction by inducing sodium- and calcium-overload in skeletal muscles. The latter, in turn, worsens the vascular situation through the generation of reactive oxygen species to close a vicious cycle from which the patient can hardly escape.

Abstract

Objective

The purpose of this study was to describe cerebrovascular, neuropathic, and autonomic features of post-acute sequelae of coronavirus disease 2019 ((COVID-19) PASC).

Methods

This retrospective study evaluated consecutive patients with chronic fatigue, brain fog, and orthostatic intolerance consistent with PASC. Controls included patients with postural tachycardia syndrome (POTS) and healthy participants. Analyzed data included surveys and autonomic (Valsalva maneuver, deep breathing, sudomotor, and tilt tests), cerebrovascular (cerebral blood flow velocity [CBFv] monitoring in middle cerebral artery), respiratory (capnography monitoring), and neuropathic (skin biopsies for assessment of small fiber neuropathy) testing and inflammatory/autoimmune markers.

Results

Nine patients with PASC were evaluated 0.8 ± 0.3 years after a mild COVID-19 infection, and were treated as home observations. Autonomic, pain, brain fog, fatigue, and dyspnea surveys were abnormal in PASC and POTS (n = 10), compared with controls (n = 15). Tilt table test reproduced the majority of PASC symptoms. Orthostatic CBFv declined in PASC (−20.0 ± 13.4%) and POTS (−20.3 ± 15.1%), compared with controls (−3.0 ± 7.5%, $p = 0.001$) and was independent of end-tidal carbon dioxide in PASC, but caused by hyperventilation in POTS. Reduced orthostatic CBFv in PASC included both subjects without (n = 6) and with (n = 3) orthostatic tachycardia. Dysautonomia was frequent (100% in both PASC and POTS) but was milder in PASC ($p = 0.002$). PASC and POTS cohorts diverged in frequency of small fiber neuropathy (89% vs 60%) but not in inflammatory markers (67% vs 70%). Supine and orthostatic hypocapnia was observed in PASC.

Interpretation

PASC following mild COVID-19 infection is associated with multisystem involvement including: (1) cerebrovascular dysregulation with persistent cerebral arteriolar vasoconstriction; (2) small fiber neuropathy and related dysautonomia; (3) respiratory dysregulation; and (4) chronic inflammation. Coronavirus disease 19 (COVID-19) is a novel infectious disease caused by severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus type 2 (SARS-CoV-2), which incited a global pandemic. Post-acute sequelae of COVID-19 (PASC) is provisionally defined as persistence or worsening of symptoms for >4 weeks or new symptoms attributable to COVID-19, affects 20–60% of patients.[1] Common complaints are fatigue, dyspnea, brain fog, and orthostatic intolerance, and a variety of systemic complaints.[2]

PASC is a multisystem disorder, however, the exact pathophysiology remains poorly understood. Potential mechanisms include post-infectious inflammation, immune-mediated vascular dysfunction, thromboembolism, lung dysfunction, and nervous system dysfunction due to occult neuronal injury during SARS-CoV-2 infection.[3], [4]

Our case report[5] suggested that PASC can be associated with autoimmune-mediated multisystem abnormalities. A patient with PASC developed intravenous immunoglobulin-responsive symptoms suggestive of cerebral hypoperfusion due to cerebrovascular arteriolar dysfunction, small fiber neuropathy (SFN), and dysautonomia.[6] We aimed to confirm these findings in a group of patients with PASC. Postural tachycardia syndrome (POTS) is characterized by symptoms that are similar to PASC, including chronic fatigue, orthostatic intolerance, and brain fog linked to reduced orthostatic cerebral blood flow and dysautonomia.[7], [8], [9] Patients with POTS thus provide a useful comparison group aside from healthy controls, to enable identification of pathophysiology distinct to PASC.

We hypothesize that PASC is associated with autoimmune/inflammatory mediated widespread cerebrovascular and metabolic dysregulation and neuropathic changes.

Methods

Study Design

Patient Population and Study Design

The study was approved by the Brigham and Women's Hospital (BWH) Institutional Review Board as a minimal risk study.

This was a single-center, retrospective study of consecutive patients who presented to BWH Autonomic Laboratory for evaluation of PASC. Inclusion criteria for the study were: (1) adult patients 18 years of age or older; (2) documented diagnosis of COVID-19 disease by history of positive reverse transcriptase-polymerase chain reaction (PCR) positive for SARS-CoV-2; (3) completion of comprehensive autonomic testing with skin biopsies; (4) availability of electronic health care records; (5) satisfying inclusion criteria for PASC; (6) for the POTS controls, matched by age and sex, satisfying criteria for POTS[10]; and (7) age and sex matched asymptomatic healthy controls were used from our previous University of Massachusetts (UMASS) study.[11] Testing at the UMASS was identical to the Brigham protocol[12] used in this study except electrochemical skin conductance (ESC)[13] was used instead of quantitative sudomotor axon reflex test (QSART) for sudomotor evaluations. ESC correlates with loss of sweat gland nerve fibers and therefore can be used as a proxy for sudomotor function.[13] In addition, the inflammatory markers were not available for controls.

Exclusion criteria were: (1) significant metabolic, and acid–base disarrangement and anemia that can influence autonomic and respiratory system and/or cerebral blood flow; (2) evidence of cardiac or pulmonary disease; (2) presence of disorders associated with secondary SFN or dysautonomia (diabetes, pre-diabetes, parkinsonism, Parkinson's disease, history of heavy alcohol use, B12 and/or folate deficiency, thyroid disease, celiac disease, hepatitis C, HIV infection, chemotherapy exposure and/or cancer diagnosis, history of autoimmune disease, and any comorbid conditions or use of medications that have been associated with SFN); (3) evidence of large fiber neuropathy on neurological examination (loss of tendon reflexes or loss of proprioception) or on nerve conduction studies; (4) the use of medications that may affect the autonomic nervous system during testing; and (5) inability to complete the Brigham protocol.

Definition of PASC

Fatigue, brain fog, and dyspnea are characteristic for PASC.[2] To grade fatigue, we used the Bristol Rheumatoid Arthritis Fatigue Numerical Rating Scales (BRAF-NRS, V2 Revised),[10] a validated self-rating scale which measures fatigue dimensions: severity (range: 0–10), effect on life (range: 0–10), and coping ability (range: 0–10).

There is no validated brain fog scale (BFS). For the purpose of this study, we defined the 11-point scale from 0 (no brain fog) to 10 (severe disabling brain fog, always present). The scale is based on a brain fog scale from 0 to 100 in 10-point intervals showing brain fog in POTS correlated with fatigue.[7]

At present, there are no established criteria for PASC.[3] Therefore, we followed the current guidelines[14] and provisional definition of PASC.[15] In general, PASC is described as signs and symptoms that develop during or after an infection consistent with COVID-19, continue for weeks and are not explained by an alternative diagnosis. Furthermore, neurological disease occurring in the 6-week interval after acute infection is associated with autoimmune mechanisms.[15]

For the purpose of this study, we defined the inclusion criteria for PASC by the following: (1) presence of chronic (>4 weeks) fatigue (grade 3 or more on each of the BRAF-NRS parts), and brain fog (grade 3 or more on BFS) which developed within the 6-week interval after acute COVID-19 infection.

Patients with POTS were defined using standard criteria.[10,16]

Additional validated neurologic symptom surveys were completed at the time of autonomic testing. Sensory complaints were surveyed by the Neuropathy Total Symptom Score-6 (NTSS), which is a validated instrument for evaluation of neuropathic pain features.[17] The NTSS quantifies sensory symptoms (aching pain, allodynia, burning pain, lancinating pain, numbness, and prickling sensation). A score >0 indicate the presence of sensory symptoms, the NTSS range is 0 to 21.96. Autonomic symptoms were obtained from the Survey of Autonomic Symptoms (SAS), which is a validated instrument for evaluation of autonomic complaints. The symptoms were grouped into orthostatic, sudomotor, vasomotor, gastrointestinal, urinary, and sexual (for men) categories.[18] The SAS score ranges from 0 to 60 for men and 0 to 55 for women with the higher number representing a more severe severity of symptoms. A modified Borg scale, which is based on category-ratio scale (CR-10), with score 0 (no dyspnea) to 10 (unbearable dyspnea) was used for grading dyspnea.[19]

Definition of SFN

SFN is defined as combination of symptoms and signs.[20] The criteria for SFN were SAS or NTSS >1 and abnormal skin biopsies or abnormal sudomotor testing.[13], [20]

Autonomic Testing

The Brigham protocol,[12] which consists of functional autonomic testing and skin biopsies for evaluation of small fibers, was used in this study. Autonomic testing included deep breathing, Valsalva maneuver, 10 minutes of the tilt test, and sudomotor evaluation. We described details of testing previously.[12] Electrocardiogram, continuous and intermittent blood pressure, end tidal CO_2, finger pulse oximetry, and cerebral blood flow velocity (CBFv) in the middle cerebral artery (MCA) using transcranial Doppler were recorded. Normative data were published previously.[12] For the CBFv, the lower limit for women/men are 82.2–0.45 (cm/s)*age (years)/72.09–0.38 (cm/s)*age (years).[12] In healthy subjects, orthostatic CBFv is either unchanged or may decline slightly. The normal decline in orthostatic CBFv from baseline is equal or less than 10% (first minute), 11% (fifth minute), and 15% (10th minute) of the tilt test.[12]

Brigham protocol results were graded using Quantitative Scale for Grading of Cardiovascular Autonomic Reflex Tests and Small Fibers from Skin Biopsies (QASAT).[12] QASAT is an objective instrument for grading severity of dysautonomia, small fiber neuropathy, and cerebral blood flow. Scores are calculated for each domain, including heart rate, blood pressure, cerebral blood flow, and end tidal CO_2. The score equal to 0 is normal, above 0 is abnormal with the severity proportional to the number.

CO_2 has a profound effect on CBFv. Hypocapnia/hypercapnia decreases/increases diameter of cerebral arterioles[21] which decreases/increases CBFv due to increase/decrease in cerebrovascular resistance. Generally, in a healthy cerebral vasculature, a decrease of end tidal CO_2 by 1 mmHg decreases cerebral blood flow by about 3%.[22] We separated the CO_2-induced CBFv changes as follows. First, we assessed the QASAT CBFv tilt test response score from raw

CBFv (QASAT-$CBFv_{tilt}$). Second, we calculated the adjusted QASAT CBFv score (QASAT-Adjusted $CBFv_{tilt}$) from the CBFv adjusted for the effect of CO_2 by calculating the how much orthostatic drop of CBFv is due to the drop of ET-CO_2. The proportion of the CBFv changes due to the effect of CO_2 was then calculated as:

$$\mathrm{QASAT-CBFv_{tilt}}-\mathrm{QASAT-Adjusted\ CBFv_{tilt}}.$$

For example if the QASAT-$CBFv_{tilt}$ = 10 (100%) and QASAT-Adjusted $CBFv_{tilt}$ = 3 (30%), than 70% ([10–3]*100) of the reduced CBFv is due to effect of CO_2 and 30% is due to cerebral arteriolar vasoconstriction.

The percentage of the cerebral arteriolar dysfunction is referred as arteriolar orthostatic index (AOI).

All data were recorded using Labchart system (ADInstruments, AU), sampled at 400 Hz. The data for final statistical analyses were obtained after 10 minutes of baseline period, and at each minute of the tilt test.

The blood pressure at the level of MCA was calculated from arm pressure by adjustment for the hydrostatic gradients.[23] With average MCA-arm distance the MVA pressure was obtained by subtracting 20 from arm pressure. That reduction is ~2 mmHg for 2.5 cm of vertical displacement. Cerebral vascular resistance index (CVRi) was calculated as mean blood pressure at the level of MCA divided by mean CBFv.[6]

We also monitored the blood oxygenation by pulse oximetry from a finger.

Skin Biopsy

Epidermal nerve fiber density (ENFD) and sweat gland nerve fiber density (SGNFD) were obtained using established standards.[20], [24] Skin samples were taken from the proximal thigh 20 cm distal to the iliac spine, and from the calf 10 cm above the lateral malleolus using a 3-mm circular punch tool. Skin samples were immunoperoxidase-stained for the axonal marker PGP 9.5. Skin processing and fiber counting was done at Therapath (New York, NY). Thresholds for normal values for proximal thigh were 8.3 fibers/mm (ENFD) and 37.8 fibers/mm (SGNFD) and 36.5 fibers/mm (SGNFD) for the calf, were established by Therapath. The age and gender adjusted ENFD normative values at the calf were also obtained from Therapath.

Grading of Small Fiber Neuropathy, Dysautonomia, and Cerebral Blood Flow

Test results were graded using the QASAT.[12] QASAT is an objective instrument for grading severity of dysautonomia, small fiber neuropathy, and cerebral blood flow. For each domain (heart rate, blood pressure, cerebral blood flow, and end tidal CO_2), the score equal to 0 is normal, above 0 is abnormal with the severity proportional to the number.

Inflammatory Panel

We measured the following serum inflammatory markers[25]: high resolution C-reactive protein (normative value < = 3 mg/L), tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-α, < = 2.8 pg/ml), interleukin (IL) IL-6 (<7.1 pg/ml), IL-10 (<2 pg/ml), IL-1ß (<7.1 pg/ml), leptin (3.3–18.3 ng/ml), adiponectin (2.4–17.9 ug/ml), trisulfated heparin disaccharide (TS-HDS) antibody (<10,000 titers),[26] fibroblast growth factor receptor 3 (FGFR3) antibody (<3,000 titers),[26] acetylcholine receptor binding antibody (< = 0.02 nmol/L), ganglionic acetylcholine receptor antibody (< = 0.02 nmol/L),[27] neuronal VGKC antibody (< = 0.02 nmol/L), calcium channel P/Q binding antibody (<= 0.02 nmol/L), myoglobin (<= 71 ng/ml),[28] and human growth hormone (0.01–3.61 ng/mL).[28] We also evaluated norepinephrine supine (70–750 pg/ml) and standing (200–1,700 pg/ml), which is useful in the assessment of the hyperadrenergic form of POTS.[10] The TS-HDS and FGFR3 antibodies were obtained from Washington University School of Medicine (St. Louis, MO), remaining antibodies as well as TNF-α, IL-10, human growth hormone were obtained from Mayo Clinic laboratories (Rochester, MN). IL-6 was obtained at Mayo Clinic laboratories (Rochester, MN) or at BWH Clinical laboratories (Boston, MA). IL-1ß was obtained at Sunquest (Tucson, AZ). Leptin was obtained at Esoterix Endocrinology (Calabasas Hills, CA). Remaining of laboratory tests were obtained at BWH Clinical laboratories (Boston, MA) or at Quest Diagnostics (Secaucus, NJ).

Statistical Analysis

A one-way analysis of variance (ANOVA) for continuous variables and chi-squared test for categorical variables were used to determine the differences between subject's groups. A Tukey's adjusted post hoc test or t test (when data from healthy controls were not available) and contingency tables with Fisher's exact test were used for PASC and POTS comparisons for continuous and categorical variables, respectively. Repeated-measures ANOVA was used to evaluate the effect of time during the tilt test. Statistical analysis was obtained using R statistical (r-project.org) and tableOne python package.[29]

Results

Demographics and Symptoms

Sixteen patients with PASC were screened (Fig 1). Active pressor medication excluded 2 individuals, and a history of SFN or dysautonomia excluded 5 individuals from the study. Nine patients with PASC (age 35.8. ± 7.3 years, 9 women, all White) were age and sex-matched with 10 patients with POTS (36.3 ± 9.8, 9 women, all White) and 15 controls (40.1 ± 11.6, 13 women, all White) were included in this study (see Table 1 and Supplementary Table S1). All patients with PASC had mild COVID-19 infection with conservative home management with one individual treated with supplemental home oxygen (see Supplementary Material Table S1). No patients with PASC included in this study received the COVID-19 vaccine and no one had a history of severe acute respiratory distress syndrome, acute kidney, or liver failure, or reported use of corticosteroids or hydroxychloroquine.

The length of time from initial documented symptoms to autonomic testing was longer in POTS compared to PASC ($p < 0.001$). No acute symptoms indicative of COVID-19 disease was exhibited up to 72 hours before and up to 5 weeks after Brigham protocol testing.

Clinical Symptoms

By definition, healthy controls were absent of chronic pain, autonomic symptoms, dyspnea, brain fog, or fatigue (Table 2). Patients with PASC and POTS reported neuropathic pain, fatigue, dyspnea, and symptoms in all surveyed autonomic domains. Several patients with PASC and POTS had a history of migraine headaches, but no one had a migraine during the testing. Autonomic complaints were not significantly different between PASC and POTS, whereas the tilt test induced dizziness and exacerbated fatigue and brain fog in both cohorts.

Autonomic Testing

Profiles of CBFv, end tidal CO_2, heart rate, and blood pressure at baseline and during the tilt test across all groups is shown in Figure 2A-F. Tables 2, 3, 4 summarize the test results. QASAT scores in healthy controls (parasympathetic, sympathetic, and sudomotor) were zero.

PASC had mild but widespread dysautonomia. Total QASAT score and autonomic failure score was lower in PASC compared to POTS (QASAT total score $p = 0.015$, QASAT autonomic failure score $p = 0.002$).

Parasympathetic dysfunction was observed in 4 patients (44%) with PASC and 2 POTS patients (20%). The QASAT parasympathetic score was similar to POTS.

Adrenergic dysfunction associated with abnormal blood pressure responses to the Valsalva maneuver was observed in 9 patients (100%) with PASC and 7 patients (70%) with POTS. The QASAT sympathetic score was similar between PASC and POTS. Sudomotor dysfunction was detected in 5 patients (56%) with PASC and 7 patients (70%) with POTS, the QASAT sudomotor score was similar. Each patient, in both groups, had at least one abnormal autonomic function test. Orthostatic hypotension, a marker of more advanced adrenergic failure, was not detected in any patient. Supine and orthostatic norepinephrine levels were similar in PASC and POTS.

Tilt Test

Baseline supine CBFv, heart rate, and blood pressure were similar among all three groups (Fig 2A–F, Tables 3 and 4). During the tilt test, the CBFv declined in both PASC and POTS groups compared with controls ($p < 0.001$), the decline was similar in PASC compared with POTS ($p = 0.997$). Orthostatic CBFv corrected for end-tidal CO_2 remained lower in PASC ($p < 0.001$) but was normalized in POTS ($p = 0.001$, comparison PASC vs POTS). In the PASC group, all patients had abnormally reduced orthostatic CBFv. Reduced orthostatic CBFv in PASC included both subjects without (n = 6) and with (n = 3) orthostatic tachycardia. The orthostatic CBFv decline in 6 patients with PASC without orthostatic tachycardia was consistent with orthostatic cerebral hypoperfusion syndrome (OCHOS) [6] and in the remaining 3 patients with PASC with orthostatic tachycardia was consistent with POTS.

Supine CVRi was similar across all groups. Orthostatic CVRi was elevated in PASC. AOI was higher in patients with PASC compared with patients with POTS. Overall, the PASC cohort had orthostatic heart rate responses similar to controls ($p = 0.088$). Orthostatic heart rate increase was more pronounced in POTS compared to PASC ($p < 0.001$). Orthostatic blood pressure was normal and QASAT adrenergic orthostatic tilt test score was equal in all studied groups ($p = 0.973$).

End Tidal CO_2

Baseline supine end tidal CO_2 was reduced in the PASC group as compared to the POTS group ($p = 0.001$) and controls ($p = 0.001$). During the tilt test, the end tidal CO_2 was stable in the controls, declined in the patients with POTS and remained low but stable in the patients with PASC. The end tidal CO_2 was similar at the end of the 10 minutes of the tilt test in the PASC and POTS groups ($p = 0.329$). The oxygen saturation was normal (>96%) in all patients throughout testing.

Skin Biopsies

Skin biopsies were normal in healthy controls. Seven patients (78%) with PASC were diagnosed with SFN on skin biopsy. One patient with normal skin biopsy had abnormal sudomotor testing consistent with SFN, thus, a total of 8 patients with PASC (89%) had SFN. ENFD was abnormal in 5 patients (56%); and SGNFD was abnormal in 5 patients (63%). One patient with normal ENFD had abnormal SGNFD. In comparison, 5 of the patients with (50%) POTS had biopsy-confirmed SFN. ENFD was abnormal in 5 patients (50%), SGNFD and ENFD were abnormal in 2 patients (20%).

One patient with POTS declined the skin biopsy but had abnormal sudomotor testing consistent with SFN. Frequency of SFN diagnosed by skin biopsy was similar between PASC and POTS ($p = 0.999$ [ENFD] and $p = 0.315$ [SGNFD]).

Inflammatory Markers

Inflammatory markers were common but heterogeneous (Tables 3 and 5). In the patients with PASC, 6 (67%) individuals showed elevation in at least one inflammatory marker, compared to 7 (70%) of patients with POTS. The TS-HDS antibody, found in 4 patients (44%) with PASC and one (10%) in a patient with POTS, was the most commonly elevated marker.

Discussion

This study showed widespread multisystem dysregulation affecting cerebrovascular, peripheral neural/autonomic, respiratory systems, and evidence of low-grade inflammation in PASC.

Cerebral Blood Flow Dysregulation

Orthostatic CBFv was abnormally reduced in PASC. The degree of CBFv reduction (~20%) is clinically significant and similar to POTS, where it has been linked to cerebral hypoperfusion.[8] Although the reduced CBFv was observed in both patients with PASC and patients with POTS, there is etiological difference.

The CBFv decline in PASC is largely independent of hypocapnia, whereas in POTS it is mainly driven by hypocapnia. This CBFv decline occurs with normal blood pressure (eg, without orthostatic hypotension), in both conditions. Cerebral blood flow primarily depends on blood pressure and CO_2. Hypocapnia decreases diameter of cerebral arterioles[21] with corresponding changes in vascular resistance and blood flow. In healthy subjects, the end tidal CO_2 changes only slightly during orthostasis. In upright posture, gravity alters blood flow causing increased pressure in the feet, and decreased pressure in the brain (~16 mmHg; see Fig 2F), forming hydrostatic gradients.[23] A normal response to the tilt test is cerebral arteriolar vasodilatation, which maintains relatively constant cerebral blood flow.

In PASC, orthostatic CBFv decline is independent of CO_2 because the orthostatic end tidal CO_2 did not decline. Therefore, reduction of orthostatic CBFv is likely due to failure to actively dilate cerebral arterioles to counteract reduced orthostatic blood pressure in the brain vasculature. The CBFv passively followed pressure drop in the MCA due to a downstream vascular resistance as cerebral arterioles remained relatively constant. This pattern is consistent with OCHOS.[6] In contrast to PASC, orthostatic CBFv decline in POTS is induced mainly by hypocapnic hyperventilation,[8], [9] the mechanisms also observed in this study.

The cause of vascular dysregulation in PASC is unclear. Cerebral vasodilatory responses are primary determined by myogenic and metabolic factors and to a lesser extent by autonomic innervation.[30] Therefore, numerous factors affect cerebrovascular regulation. Low-grade vascular inflammation may play a role given the association of low-grade inflammation with greater arterial stiffness mediated by multiple elements in the vascular wall.[31] Reduced cerebral blood flow, increased cerebrovascular resistance, inflammation, and damage of the vascular bed may interfere with brain tissue oxygenation and has been linked to cognitive deficit.[32]

Clinically, PASC resembles myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome (ME/CFS) in many respects, including women's preponderance, symptoms overlap, and postviral sequale.[33] Patients with ME/CFS have vascular dysregulation associated with cerebral hypoperfusion and orthostatic intolerance, findings which are similar to our PASC cohort. Hence, both PASC and ME/CFS can follow a common postviral trajectory associated with endothelial dysfunction. Endotheliitis caused by infection or inflammation of endothelial cells around the brainstem has been already considered as a driver for PASC.[34]

Small Fiber Neuropathy, Dysautonomia, and Pain

Direct evidence of SFN on skin biopsy was found in 78% of PASC cases. Our findings are consistent with reported loss of small fibers in patients with PASC using corneal confocal microscopy.[35] Sudomotor dysfunction was reported in 26% of patients who recovered from COVID-19,[36] which is less than in our study (56%). The difference may be due to differences in the patients' selection and normative values. SFN can be an underlying cause of dysautonomia, which could explain the multi-organ symptoms. Our study detected frequent dysautonomia in PASC affecting several autonomic systems (eg, parasympathetic, sympathetic adrenergic and sudomotor), in most cases, confirming a recent report.[37] Dysautonomia was mild in both patients with PASC and patients with POTS, as evidenced by lack of orthostatic hypotension.

A variety of pain symptoms were reported in PASC.[2], [3] All our patients with PASC suffered from chronic pain, however, in most cases, the pain was moderate. Here, we observed damage of small sensory fibers on skin biopsies in the majority of patients with PASC, a loss which can be an etiological source of pain.[20]

The origin of SFN and related dysautonomia in PASC remains to be clarified. In general, COVID-19 may cause SFN and related dysautonomia and sensory complaints de novo, or can exacerbate or unmask the underlying condition.[37]

Although the testing in our patients with PASC corresponds to one timepoint, the abnormal findings could be the result of COVID-19 as history of symptoms and signs indicative of SFN or dysautonomia were absent and no patient complained of brain fog and fatigue before the onset of the COVID-19.

Hypocapnic Hyperventilation

Patients with PASC reported chronic dyspnea and had lower supine baseline end tidal CO_2 compared with both patients with POTS and controls suggesting the presence of hyperventilation-induced hypocapnia. Orthostatic hypocapnia typically accompanying POTS,[8] was also noted in our PASC cohort. Chronic hyperventilation, however, can be detrimental to brain functioning because it increases pH and alters excitability of the cell membranes.[38], [39]

Persistent respiratory symptoms have been reported in patients with PASC and exercise hyperventilation has been described as a major limiting factor in COVID-19 survivors.[4] The origin of hyperventilation is unknown. The respiratory symptoms and hyperventilation in PASC can be due to pathophysiology of organ damage during the initial phase of the disease or it is part of PASC, or both. In our cohort, no patient had significant metabolic or acid–base disarrangement, oxygen desaturation, or cardiorespiratory disease that may explain hypocapnia. We did not perform comprehensive pulmonary testing, however, it was shown that, in patients with PASC, respiratory complaints cannot be accounted for by impairment of pulmonary function alone.[4] We speculate that the abnormal ventilation control in PASC is compensatory and may stem from cerebral hypoperfusion by either stimulating automatic ventilator control or suppressing the inhibitory systems.

Inflammatory Markers

Elevated inflammatory markers were identified in most of PASC cases in this study, suggesting that chronic inflammation due to autoimmunity may play a role in our findings. The most common was the TS-HDS antibody, present in 4 patients (44%) with PASC but only in one patient (10%) with POTS. TS-HDS is an abundant disaccharide component of heparin sulfate found at peripheral nerve sites.[26] Anti-TS-HDS is associated with thickened basal lamina and deposition of the terminal C5b-C9-lytic complex on endoneural capillaries. Anti-TS-HDS were found previously in a subset of patients with SFN and dysautonomia.[26], [40] Capillary pathology associated with TS-HDS points to immune mediated vasculitis as an underlying substrate of SFN and dysautonomia in patients with anti-TS-HDS. Nevertheless, TS-HDS antibodies were detected only in 44% of patients with PASC, and therefore its significance has to be confirmed in a larger cohort.

We observed multiple autoantibodies in PASC. We also found heterogeneous, although different antibodies in the POTS group which is consistent with the literature.[41] The reason for the mixed pattern of detectable autoantibodies for PASC and POTS syndrome is unclear. It is possible that the presence of autoantibodies represents overall immune system dysfunction, susceptibility to autoimmunity, or it is a proxy for chronic low-grade inflammation. However, it is inherently difficult to detect chronic low grade inflammation as no reliable chronic inflammatory markers exist.[25] However, the preponderance of women in PASC, also observed in other studies,[42] is consistent with underlying autoimmune mechanisms, perhaps due to the immunomodulatory and vasodilatory effect of estrogen.[43] False positive results need to be considered particularly for antibodies with low titers.[44] Recent autopsy studies of hospitalized patients with fatal COVID-19 showed evidence of immune-mediated inflammation of muscles[45], [46] and peripheral nerve tissue[46] with abnormal expression of a type 1 interferon-inducible protein compared to hospitalized cohorts. Whereas an activated innate immune system response can be an underlying mechanism of SFN, none of our patients with PASC had evidence of myopathy on clinical examination; or had a muscle or nerve biopsy to determine the levels of inflammatory infiltrate. Creatine kinase was also normal in all 7 patients with PASC with available laboratory testing. The degree to which dysautonomia is observed in patients with PASC is a result of impaired inflammatory response and remains to be fully defined.

Furthermore, 78% of patients with PASC had a history of anxiety/depression before COVID-19, therefore neuropsychiatric vulnerability for PASC may exits.

Limitations

The number of patients in each group was relatively small, although the groups were well matched. Thus, generalization of results to other patients with PASC will need to be confirmed. PASC remains a poorly defined clinical syndrome, and more studies are needed to understand its pathophysiology. This was a retrospective study and subject to referral and selection biases. We evaluated the CBFv as a proxy for cerebral blood flow, as well as for cerebral perfusion. This approach is based on the assumption that the diameter of middle cerebral artery is constant during insonation. Orthostasis does not change the middle cerebral artery diameter[47] implying that CBFv is a good substitute for cerebral blood flow measurements. We used nonspecific immune markers. Future studies may utilize more sensitive and specific inflammatory markers induced by SARS-CoV-2 virus. We did not perform cardiovascular magnetic resonance (CMR) studies to assess myocarditis that has been reported in PASC and may cause tachycardia and chest pain.[48] CMR should be performed when cardiovascular autonomic testing does not lead to diagnosis or an electrocardiogram (ECG) shows typical changes,[49] which was not seen in our cases. We also did not perform full pulmonary assessment in our PASC cohort.

Conclusions

This study detected multisystem abnormalities in cerebrovascular, respiratory, neuronal, and autoimmune systems in PASC. We suspect that low grade inflammation of small vessels plays a role. Larger prospective studies are needed to confirm our findings.

Summary

Post-acute sequelae of coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19; PASC) is a complication of COVID-19 disease associated with chronic fatigue, brain fog and orthostatic intolerance. Pathophysiology of PASC is poorly understood.

This study evaluated patients with PASC following mild COVID-19 infection using standardized autonomic assessments, including Valsalva maneuver, deep breathing, sudomotor and tilt tests with cerebral blood flow velocity (CBFv) measurements, and skin biopsies for small fiber neuropathy (SFN).

This study showed that PASC following mild COVID-19 is associated with multisystem involvement, including cerebrovascular and respiratory dysregulation, small fiber neuropathy, and related dysautonomia and chronic inflammation.

Autonomic testing expanded for cerebrovascular measurements and skin biopsies can explain some of the PASC symptoms and could guide treatment.

Possible Role of Fibrinaloid Microclots in Postural Orthostatic Tachycardia Syndrome (POTS): Focus on Long COVID

Abstract

Postural orthostatic tachycardia syndrome (POTS) is a common accompaniment of a variety of chronic, inflammatory diseases, including long COVID, as are small, insoluble, 'fibrinaloid' microclots. We here develop the argument, with accompanying evidence, that fibrinaloid microclots, through their ability to block the flow of blood through microcapillaries and thus cause tissue hypoxia, are not simply correlated with but in fact, by preceding it, may be a chief intermediary cause of POTS, in which tachycardia is simply the body's exaggerated 'physiological' response to hypoxia. Similar reasoning accounts for the symptoms bundled under the term 'fatigue'. Amyloids are known to be membrane disruptors, and when their targets are nerve membranes, this can explain neurotoxicity and hence the autonomic nervous system dysfunction that contributes to POTS. Taken together as a system view, we indicate that fibrinaloid microclots can serve to link POTS and fatigue in long COVID in a manner that is at once both mechanistic and explanatory. This has clear implications for the treatment of such diseases.

Abstract

Background: Fibrin(ogen) amyloid microclots and platelet hyperactivation previously reported as a novel finding in South African patients with the coronavirus 2019 disease (COVID-19) and Long COVID/Post-Acute Sequelae of COVID-19 (PASC), might form a suitable set of foci for the clinical treatment of the symptoms of Long COVID/PASC. A Long COVID/PASC Registry was subsequently established as an online platform where patients can report Long COVID/PASC symptoms and previous comorbidities.

Methods: In this study, we report on the comorbidities and persistent symptoms, using data obtained from 845 South African Long COVID/PASC patients. By using a previously published scoring system for fibrin amyloid microclots and platelet pathology, we also analysed blood samples from 80 patients, and report the presence of significant fibrin amyloid microclots and platelet pathology in all cases.

Results: Hypertension, high cholesterol levels (dyslipidaemia), cardiovascular disease and type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) were found to be the most important comorbidities. The gender balance (70% female) and the most commonly reported Long COVID/PASC symptoms (fatigue, brain fog, loss of concentration and forgetfulness, shortness of breath, as well as joint and muscle pains) were comparable to those reported elsewhere. These findings confirmed that our sample was not atypical. Microclot and platelet pathologies were associated with Long COVID/PASC symptoms that persisted after the recovery from acute COVID-19.

Conclusions: Fibrin amyloid microclots that block capillaries and inhibit the transport of O_2 to tissues, accompanied by platelet hyperactivation, provide a ready explanation for the symptoms of Long COVID/PASC. Removal and reversal of these underlying endotheliopathies provide an important treatment option that urgently warrants controlled clinical studies to determine efficacy in patients with a diversity of comorbidities impacting on SARS-CoV-2 infection and COVID-19 severity. We suggest that our platelet and clotting grading system provides a simple and cost-effective diagnostic method for early detection of Long COVID/PASC as a major determinant of effective treatment, including those focusing on reducing clot burden and platelet hyperactivation.

The intersection of obesity and (long) COVID-19: Hypoxia, thrombotic inflammation, and vascular endothelial injury

Abstract

The role of hypoxia, vascular endothelial injury, and thrombotic inflammation in worsening COVID-19 symptoms has been generally recognized. Damaged vascular endothelium plays a crucial role in forming in situ thrombosis, pulmonary dysfunction, and hypoxemia. Thrombotic inflammation can further aggravate local vascular endothelial injury and affect ventilation and blood flow ratio. According to the results of many studies, obesity is an independent risk factor for a variety of severe respiratory diseases and contributes to high mechanical ventilation rate, high mortality, and slow recovery in COVID-19 patients. This review will explore the mechanisms by which obesity may aggravate the acute phase of COVID-19 and delay long COVID recovery by affecting hypoxia, vascular endothelial injury, and thrombotic inflammation. A systematic search of PubMed database was conducted for papers published since January 2020, using the medical subject headings of "COVID-19" and "long COVID" combined with the following keywords: "obesity," "thrombosis," "endothelial injury," "inflammation," "hypoxia," "treatment," and "anticoagulation." In patients with obesity, the accumulation of central fat restricts the expansion of alveoli, exacerbating the pulmonary dysfunction caused by SARS-CoV-2 invasion, inflammatory damage, and lung edema. Abnormal fat secretion and immune impairment further aggravate the original tissue damage and inflammation diffusion. Obesity weakens baseline vascular endothelium function leading to an early injury and pre-thrombotic state after infection. Enhanced procoagulant activity and microthrombi promote early obstruction of the vascular. Obesity also prolongs the duration of symptoms and increases the risk of sequelae after hospital discharge. Persistent viral presence, long-term inflammation, microclots, and hypoxia may contribute to the development of persistent symptoms, suggesting that patients with obesity are uniquely susceptible to long COVID. Early interventions, including supplemental oxygen, comprehensive antithrombotic therapy, and anti-inflammatory drugs, show effectiveness in many studies in the prevention of serious hypoxia, thromboembolic events, and systemic inflammation, and are therefore recommended to reduce intensive care unit admission, mortality, and sequelae.

The Occurrence of Hyperactivated Platelets and Fibrinaloid Microclots in Myalgic Encephalomyelitis/Chronic Fatigue Syndrome (ME/CFS)

Abstract

We have previously demonstrated that platelet-poor plasma (PPP) obtained from patients with Long COVID/Post-Acute Sequelae of COVID-19 (PASC) is characterized by a hypercoagulable state and contains hyperactivated platelets and considerable numbers of already-formed amyloid fibrin(ogen) or fibrinaloid microclots. Due to the substantial overlap in symptoms and etiology between Long COVID/PASC and ME/CFS, we investigated whether coagulopathies reflected in Long COVID/PASC-hypercoagulability, platelet hyperactivation, and fibrinaloid microclot formation-were present in individuals with ME/CFS and gender- and age-matched healthy controls. ME/CFS samples showed significant hypercoagulability as judged by thromboelastography of both whole blood and platelet-poor plasma. The area of plasma images containing fibrinaloid microclots was commonly more than 10-fold greater in untreated PPP from individuals with ME/CFS than in that of healthy controls. A similar difference was found when the plasma samples were treated with thrombin. Using fluorescently labelled PAC-1, which recognizes glycoprotein IIb/IIIa, and CD62P, which binds P-selectin, we observed hyperactivation of platelets in ME/CFS hematocrit samples. Using a quantitative scoring system, the ME/CFS platelets were found to have a mean spreading score of 2.72 ± 1.24 vs. 1.00 (activation with pseudopodia formation) for healthy controls. We conclude that ME/CFS is accompanied by substantial and measurable changes in coagulability, platelet hyperactivation, and fibrinaloid microclot formation. However, the fibrinaloid microclot load was not as great as was previously noted in Long COVID/PASC. Fibrinaloid microclots, in particular, may contribute to many ME/CFS symptoms, such as fatigue, seen in patients with ME/CFS, via the (temporary) blockage of microcapillaries and hence ischemia. Furthermore, fibrinaloid microclots might damage the endothelium. The discovery of these biomarkers represents an important development in ME/CFS research. It also points to possible uses for treatment strategies using known drugs and/or nutraceuticals that target systemic vascular pathology and endothelial inflammation.

The potential role of ischaemia–reperfusion injury in chronic, relapsing diseases such as rheumatoid arthritis, Long COVID, and ME/CFS: evidence, mechanisms, and therapeutic implications

Abstract

Ischaemia-reperfusion (I-R) injury, initiated via bursts of reactive oxygen species produced during the reoxygenation phase following hypoxia, is well known in a variety of acute circumstances. We argue here that I-R injury also underpins elements of the pathology of a variety of chronic, inflammatory diseases, including rheumatoid arthritis, ME/CFS and, our chief focus and most proximally, Long COVID. Ischaemia may be initiated via fibrin amyloid microclot blockage of capillaries, for instance as exercise is started; reperfusion is a necessary corollary when it finishes. We rehearse the mechanistic evidence for these occurrences here, in terms of their manifestation as oxidative stress, hyperinflammation, mast cell activation, the production of marker metabolites and related activities. Such microclot-based phenomena can explain both the breathlessness/fatigue and the post-exertional malaise that may be observed in these conditions, as well as many other observables. The recognition of these processes implies, mechanistically, that therapeutic benefit is potentially to be had from antioxidants, from anti-inflammatories, from iron chelators, and via suitable, safe fibrinolytics, and/or anti-clotting agents. We review the considerable existing evidence that is consistent with this, and with the biochemical mechanisms involved.

Thromboinflammation in long COVID-the elusive key to postinfection sequelae?

Abstract

Long COVID is a public health emergency affecting millions of people worldwide, characterized by heterogeneous symptoms across multiple organ systems. Here, we discuss the current evidence linking thromboinflammation to postacute sequelae of COVID-19. Studies have found persistence of vascular damage with increased circulating markers of endothelial dysfunction, coagulation abnormalities with heightened thrombin generation capacity, and abnormalities in platelet counts in postacute sequelae of COVID-19. Neutrophil phenotype resembles acute COVID-19 with an increase in activation and Neutrophil Extracellular Trap formation. These insights are potentially linked by elevated platelet-neutrophil aggregate formation. This hypercoagulable state in turn can lead to microvascular thrombosis, evidenced by microclots and elevated D-dimer in the circulation as well as perfusion abnormalities in the lungs and brains of patients with long COVID. Also, COVID-19 survivors experience an increased rate of arterial and venous thrombotic events. We discuss 3 important, potentially intertwined hypotheses that might contribute to thromboinflammation in long COVID: lasting structural changes, most prominently endothelial damage, caused during initial infection; a persistent viral reservoir; and immunopathology driven by a misguided immune system. Finally, we outline the necessity for large, well-characterized clinical cohorts and mechanistic studies to clarify the contribution of thromboinflammation to long COVID.

Abstract

Long coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19)-a postacute consequence of severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 infection-manifests with a broad spectrum of relapsing and remitting or persistent symptoms as well as varied levels of organ damage, which may be asymptomatic or present as acute events such as heart attacks or strokes and recurrent infections, hinting at complex underlying pathogenic mechanisms. Central to these symptoms is vascular dysfunction rooted in thrombotic endothelialitis. We review the scientific evidence that widespread endothelial dysfunction (ED) leads to chronic symptomatology. We briefly examine the molecular pathways contributing to endothelial pathology and provide a detailed analysis of how these cellular processes underpin the clinical picture. Noninvasive diagnostic techniques, such as flow-mediated dilation and peripheral arterial tonometry, are evaluated for their utility in identifying ED. We then explore mechanistic, cellular-targeted therapeutic interventions for their potential in treating ED. Overall, we emphasize the critical role of cellular health in managing Long COVID and highlight the need for early intervention to prevent long-term vascular and cellular dysfunction.

10 Facts about the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) Excess Medical Expenses Deduction 30

Introduction

The Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) is issuing this guide to clarify who is considered elderly and disabled for purposes of the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and the requirements and dynamics of the excess medical expenses deduction. This guidance is based on relevant sections of the Food and Nutrition Act of 2008 (the Act), part 273 of title 7 of the Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) (SNAP regulations), and policy guidance issued by FNS.

Under SNAP regulations, households are entitled to a medical expenses deduction from their income calculation if one or more household members are elderly or disabled. Only those medical expenses incurred by the elderly or disabled household member in excess of $35 per month and not paid by insurance or another third party can be deducted.

This guide examines how eligibility workers verify who qualifies as elderly or disabled for purposes of SNAP, determine allowable medical expenses, calculate the actual deduction, and act on reported changes. At the end of key sections, Knowledge Checks provide the opportunity to check the reader's understanding by answering questions based on the material covered. Answers are located near the end of the guide. The Appendix of this guide contains examples of informational materials written in plain language that can be used to help SNAP clients better understand the medical expenses deduction.

State responsibilities and flexibilities

State agencies are required to ensure that all eligible applicants receive the SNAP benefits to which they are entitled. The proper calculation of medical expenses deductions can be critical to determining correctly the amount of SNAP benefits that households containing elderly and disabled members are eligible to receive. State agencies must be sure that such households are aware of the deduction. State agencies should keep this in mind when designing applications and notices.

A State agency is not required to list every possible deductible expense on its SNAP application. A tiered approach may be more administratively feasible. For example, a household with an elderly or disabled member could receive a brief addendum that asks general questions about medical expenses. If the household reported owning a service animal, the State agency could then ask more detailed questions about food and medical care for the animal on an addendum or as part of the interview. If the household failed to report the costs of the service animal's food and medical care after being informed about deductibility of those items, the State agency would correctly conclude that the household does not want to deduct unreported veterinary bills. SNAP regulations do not require that medical expense questions appear on a State agency's SNAP application, but eligibility workers need to cover the questions in the interview and document the questions and answers if they do not appear on the State's SNAP application.

Some State agencies include the following wording on SNAP applications: "Failure to report or verify any of the above listed expenses will be seen as a statement by your household that you do not want to receive a deduction for the unreported expense." State agencies that use this or similar application language are still required to ensure that applicants receive the SNAP benefits to which they are entitled. A household cannot be responsible for failing to report information, or for not verifying information, if the household is not aware of the requirement.

Many deductible medical expenses, such as transportation costs, are not readily apparent to clients. Therefore, a State agency using application language like that described above may only conclude that a household does not want to deduct an expense if:

1. the State agency asked about the unreported expense or requested verification through use of a question specific enough that a household completely unfamiliar with SNAP policy could answer the question;

2. the household did not report or verify the expense;

3. the State agency notified the household that verification is required, gave the household sufficient time to provide verification, and offered to help the household obtain verification; and

4. the State agency documented the reason for not deducting the expense.

Determining who is elderly or disabled

Who is elderly or disabled?

The first question an eligibility worker must answer is whether any household members are entitled to the medical expenses deduction. Households are entitled to a medical expenses deduction only if one or more members are elderly or disabled. SNAP regulations at 7 CFR 271.2 define who qualifies as "elderly or disabled" for purposes of SNAP.

Only households containing individuals who meet the SNAP definition of "elderly or disabled" are entitled to the excess medical expenses deduction. A person is considered disabled if they are certified for benefits listed in §271.2, even if they are not actually receiving benefits. This includes persons who have been certified but have not yet received their first payments, those who remain certified but whose benefits are entirely recouped to repay a prior overpayment, and those certified but not receiving payments due to income restrictions.

Individuals who do not qualify

The following individuals are not considered disabled for SNAP purposes unless they also meet one of the SNAP disability criteria under 7 CFR 271.2:

- An individual who is exempt from the student work requirement under §273.5 or work registration under §273.7 due to physical or mental unfitness for employment. For instance, a person may be exempt from these requirements due to a temporary illness or disability, but if they do not meet one of the §271.2 requirements they are not entitled to a medical expenses deduction.
- A spouse or other person receiving benefits as a dependent of an SSI or disability recipient.
- An individual who is disabled by Social Security standards but not receiving SSI benefits.
- An individual who has applied for SSI but has not been approved for SSI, presumptive disability payments, or emergency advance payments.

Timing of eligibility determination

If a household member will turn 60 years old during the first month of the certification period, the medical expenses deduction should be allowed beginning that month. If the person will turn 60 years old later in the certification period, any reported medical expenses should be allowed beginning in the month the member turns 60. For individuals anticipating Social Security disability or SSI benefits, the deduction can be allowed when they begin receiving benefits.

How does an eligibility worker verify eligibility for the medical expenses deduction?

The second question an eligibility worker must answer is how to verify disability. This is described in SNAP regulations at 7 CFR 273.2(f)(1)(viii).

Determining whether a disability qualifies

In determining what is "a disability considered permanent under section 221(i) of the Social Security Act" under SNAP regulations, State agencies must obtain and use updated lists of what are considered permanent disabilities by the Social Security Administration (SSA). Eligibility workers may also determine by observation that an individual is unable to purchase and prepare meals because he or she suffers from a severe physical or mental disability even if the disability is not specifically mentioned on the SSA list.

If a disability is not on the SSA list and is not obvious to the eligibility worker, the eligibility worker must verify disability using a statement from a physician or licensed mental health practitioner certifying that the individual (in the physician's/practitioner's opinion) is unable to purchase and prepare meals because he or she suffers from one of the nonobvious disabilities mentioned in the SSA list, or is unable to purchase meals because he or she suffers from some other severe, permanent physical or mental disease or nondisease-related disability. State agencies may not require personnel responsible for making Social Security disability determinations to make a disability determination for SNAP purposes.

For a recipient of State disability payments to be considered disabled under SNAP, the State disability retirement system must have used criteria for determining the individual's disability status that can be reasonably seen to be the same as the SSA criteria. Similarly, in the case of individuals receiving State disability or blindness payments, the State agency must determine whether its payments to a particular individual are based on the Supplemental Security Income (SSI) rules. The State is in the best position to interpret its own laws as to whether a particular disability retirement benefit program in the State is "from a governmental agency".

Medicaid

Receipt of Medicaid alone does not establish disability for SNAP purposes. Additionally, an individual subject to the Medicaid spend-down is not even considered a recipient of Medicaid until the spend-down requirement has been satisfied. For more information about calculating medical expenses under the Medicaid spend-down program, see How is the Medicaid spend-down treated?

Supplemental Security Income (SSI)

A household member is considered to be disabled for SNAP purposes if they receive a regular SSI check, an SSI presumptive disability payment, or an SSI emergency advance payment.

- SSI presumptive disability payments are regular benefits paid for a temporary duration to people who will most likely meet SSI disability criteria. If a person is approved for presumptive SSI and then denied, the excess medical expenses deduction must be removed according to regular processing standards.

- An SSI emergency advance payment is a single payment provided to applicants who appear to meet the eligibility criteria and who are considered in need of immediate assistance.

Federal Employee Compensation Act (FECA)

Receipt of payments under the Federal Employee Compensation Act (FECA) is not, by itself, evidence of disability for SNAP purposes. There are two types of FECA payments:

1. Temporary benefits for employees injured on the job who receive benefits while they recover; these do not satisfy the SNAP disability requirements.

2. Benefits for permanently disabled employees who opt for FECA benefits in lieu of Civil Service Retirement (CSR) benefits; these do qualify as "disability retirement benefits from a government agency".

How does elderly and disabled status affect household composition?

Under SNAP regulations, everyone who lives together and purchases and prepares meals together is considered a household. Some people who live together are required to be included in the same household, even if they purchase and prepare meals separately. This includes married spouses, children under age 22 who are living with their parents, and children under 18 years old who are living with and are under the parental control of a household member other than their parents.

Under §273.1(b)(2), an otherwise eligible member of a household may be considered, together with his or her spouse (if living there), a separate SNAP household from the others with whom the individual lives, if the individual is:

1. 60 years of age or older; and

2. Unable to purchase and prepare meals separately because of a disability considered permanent under the Social Security Act or a non-disease-related, severe, permanent disability.

To be eligible for separate household status because of disability, the elderly household member must be either receiving disability benefits or certified to receive the benefits at the time that the SNAP determination is made.

Separate household status may not be granted:

- When the income of the others with whom the elderly disabled individual lives (excluding the income of the elderly and disabled individual and his or her spouse) exceeds 165 percent of the poverty line; or
- To a spouse, any child under 18 years of age who is under the parental control of the elderly disabled person, or any person under 22 years of age who is the natural, adoptive, or step child of the elderly disabled person.

Nonhousehold members

A household that is responsible for paying the medical expenses of a nonhousehold member is not entitled to the medical expenses deduction because of that person.

Former or deceased household members

Under §273.9(d)(3)(ii), if an individual was a household member immediately prior to entering a hospital or nursing home, the household is entitled to the medical expenses deduction for those expenses incurred by the former household member if the household continues to be legally responsible for paying those expenses.

Medical expenses are also deductible if the elderly/disabled person who is in a home or hospital would have been included in the SNAP household prior to incurring the expense. The household does not have to be participating prior to incurring the expense to be eligible for the deduction, but the eligibility worker has to determine if the expenses were allowable or past due.

The medical expenses of a deceased household member (who met the definition of elderly or disabled while a member of the household) are allowable if the remaining household members are legally responsible for the bills.

Effect of ineligible household members

Under §273.11(c)(1)(i), if an elderly or disabled household member is ineligible because of a disqualification for an intentional program violation, a felony drug conviction, fleeing felon status, noncompliance with a work requirement under §273.7, or imposition of a sanction while the member was participating in a household disqualified because of failure to comply with workfare requirements, the remaining eligible household members would continue to be eligible for the medical expenses deduction and the income and resources of the ineligible household member would also continue to count in their entirety.

Knowledge Check #1

1. A child is disabled by Social Security standards and receiving SSI benefits due to her disability. After the death of her father, she begins receiving Social Security death benefits based on her father's work history. Because the death benefits are higher, her SSI benefits are terminated. Is the child still eligible to receive a SNAP deduction for her medical expenses?

2. A 70-year-old woman was living with her 40-year-old daughter. They had separate SNAP households. The mother is admitted for long-term care in the hospital, so her case is closed. The daughter is making sporadic payments for hospital costs. May the daughter claim a medical expenses deduction for her mother's hospital expenses?

3. An elderly husband and wife were not participating in SNAP. The husband goes to the hospital in September. The wife applies for SNAP benefits in October. May the wife claim a medical expenses deduction for her husband's hospital expenses?

4. A household applies in January and is certified through December. One of the members will turn 60 in March and has allowable medical expenses. When should the expenses be deducted?

Jump to answers.

Determining allowable medical expenses

Once an eligibility worker has determined that the household contains elderly or disabled members, the next question is whether the household incurs allowable medical expenses. SNAP regulations at 7 CFR 273.9(d)(3) describe what are allowable medical expenses. Only medical expenses incurred by the elderly or disabled household member are allowable.

What are eligibility workers allowed to question?

SNAP regulations do not allow State agencies to evaluate whether a prescribed treatment is appropriate or necessary for an individual's medical condition. Additionally, the household's intent to pay is not a consideration in allowing an expense. The eligibility worker must instead evaluate whether a specific expense was prescribed or approved by a State-licensed practitioner or qualified health professional as determined by State definitions or authorities, and verify the expenses in accordance with SNAP regulations.

If it is questionable whether a practitioner is licensed, the local office can contact the State medical licensing board or the county medical association for assistance. A State agency may choose to list types of licensed and qualified practitioners in its certification manual. If the practitioner is licensed or qualified by the appropriate State authority, both the practitioner's fees and treatments and drugs prescribed or approved by the practitioner are deductible as medical expenses.

Special diets and over-the-counter medications

Special diets are not an allowable medical expenses deduction, even if they are prescribed or approved by a licensed practitioner or other qualified health professional recognized by the State. "Special diets" includes those prescribed for people with diabetes, prescribed liquid diets and nutritional supplements, allergy-free foods, special diets necessitated by religious considerations, and any item (including organic or fresh food and bottled water) that can be otherwise purchased with SNAP benefits. To determine whether a particular item is purchasable with SNAP benefits, State agencies should look to the product label. Items with a nutrition facts label that are sold in a SNAP-authorized retailer are eligible foods. Items with a supplement facts label are not eligible foods.

In making determinations about whether a particular over-the-counter medication is an allowable deduction or a non-allowable special diet, State agencies should apply a consistent policy and ensure that any allowable deduction is approved or prescribed by a licensed practitioner or other qualified health professional, not purchasable with SNAP benefits, and not part of a special diet as described above.

Schedule I controlled substances

Schedule I controlled substances are not allowable medical expenses under Federal law, regardless of whether they have been prescribed in accordance with State law. Under the Controlled Substances Act, marijuana is a Schedule I controlled substance that has no currently accepted medical use and cannot be prescribed for medicinal purposes. No Schedule I controlled substance may be allowed as a medical expenses deduction for purposes of SNAP.

Allowable expense decision tree

In considering whether an expense is allowable for the excess medical expenses deduction, ask the following questions:

1. Is the expense for a medication, medical supply, equipment, or service prescribed or approved by a State-licensed or qualified health practitioner?
   If the answer is no, disallow the expense.
   If yes, continue to the next question:

2. Is the expense for a special diet or an item that can be otherwise purchased with SNAP benefits?
   If the answer is yes, disallow the expense.
   If yes, continue to the next question:

3. Is the expense a Schedule I controlled substance?
   If the answer is yes, disallow the expense.
   If no, then generally the expense should be allowed.

What are some examples of specific types of expenses?

Alternative therapies

In some States, acupuncturists, massage therapists, herbalists, and other alternative medicine practitioners are licensed and recognized by the State Medical Board. If such a State-licensed health practitioner prescribes or approves an alternative therapy or medicine (such as acupuncture or herbs prescribed for therapeutic purposes), the costs for the practitioner and the therapy or medicine may be allowed as a medical expense if they cannot be otherwise purchased with SNAP benefits and are not prescribed as part of a special diet.

Insurance policies

Premiums for certain types of insurance policies are allowable deductions. Generally, if the insurance policy itself states that the payments are intended to cover medical expenses, it is reasonable to conclude that it is the household member's intent to use the benefits for paying medical bills rather than to meet normal living expenses.

- Policies that pay a household a specific amount of money for each day the person is in the hospital are only allowable expenses if the policy itself states that the monies are intended to be used to cover medical expenses.

- Policies that state that the insurance payments are intended to cover cancer treatment or nursing home care are allowable expenses.

- Ambulance insurance policies are allowable expenses.

Only the portion of a medical insurance premium assigned to the elderly or disabled household member may be considered when calculating the deductible amount. If the policy does not specify how much of the premium is for each household member, the eligibility worker may prorate the premium amount among all household members. Only the prorated amount for the eligible member would be considered a deduction.

If the policy holder is not elderly or disabled, but the family policy includes a person who is eligible for the medical expenses deduction, that part of the premium for the eligible member may be used in calculating the deduction.

Payments on loans and credit card interest

Households may receive a medical expenses deduction for payments made on a conventional loan when the loan is used to pay a one-time only medical expense, but loan expenses (such as interest) are not allowable as part of the deduction. If a household obtains a mortgage for the purpose of financing a large medical expense, the mortgage payments should be treated as shelter costs and are not deductible as medical expenses.

Medical expenses billed on a credit card are allowable and considered billed when the charge account statement is received. The interest may not be included as a deduction.

Service animals

Costs of securing and maintaining any animal specially trained to serve the needs of elderly or disabled program participants are allowable medical expenses. Examples of such animals include seeing guide dogs, hearing guide dogs, and housekeeper monkeys. Food and veterinarian bills associated with the service animal are also allowable costs.

An animal must be specially trained to assist the SNAP recipient in order for its associated maintenance costs (such as veterinary bills, food, and other expenses) to be allowable deductions. While specific types of training, credentials, or certifications are not required, if the animal has not been specially trained to assist the individual with the medical issue for which the animal is prescribed, it is not a service animal and its expenses are not deductible. A pet or companion animal that a client already owns does not automatically become a service animal if the client is later prescribed a service animal.

Transportation and lodging costs

Each State may set amounts to be considered reasonable costs of transportation and lodging that are incurred to obtain medical treatment or services. Use of State Department of Revenue or Federal Internal Revenue Service rates is permissible for mileage in a privately owned vehicle and should be applied consistently among all households in the State. State agencies should provide guidelines for eligibility workers to judge the reasonableness of lodging costs. State agencies have flexibility in developing these guidelines. The guidelines could be a flat, State-wide amount; could include variations for rural and urban areas; and could provide the basis for making exceptions to the established rates.

Eligibility workers must verify transportation and lodging costs submitted as medical expenses. Transportation costs include trips to a pharmacy or other location to fill prescriptions, fittings for dentures, hearing aids, or glasses, as well as trips to the doctor, dentist, etc. Like other medical expenses, only those transportation and lodging costs incurred by the elderly or disabled household member are allowable.

Miscellaneous

- The term “eye glasses” in the SNAP regulations also includes costs for contact lens.
- Postage for mail-order prescription drugs is an allowable medical expense.
- Adaptive equipment in vehicles and homes as well as monthly telephone fees for amplifiers and warning signals for elderly or disabled individuals, and the costs of telecommunications devices for the elderly or disabled may be considered allowable medical expenses deductions.
- A relative, who is not a household member, may be an attendant, as that term is used in §273.9(d)(3)(x). Child care expenses for a child receiving SSI are allowable medical costs if the expenses are necessary and identifiable. If a household incurs attendant care costs that could qualify under both the medical expenses deduction of §273.9(d)(3)(x) and the dependent care deduction of §273.9(d)(4), the costs may be deducted as a medical expense or a dependent care expense, but not both.

How does an eligibility worker verify medical expenses?

Although an eligibility worker may not question what a State-licensed or qualified health practitioner determines to be necessary medical treatment, verification is critical to ensure that claimed medical expenses are legitimate. Medical expenses totaling $35 and less should not be verified since they will not result in a deduction.

Documentary Evidence

Per §273.2(f)(4), the eligibility worker must use documentary evidence as the primary source of verification. Documentary evidence consists of a written confirmation of the household's medical expenses. Examples of acceptable documentary evidence include:

- Bills or statements from providers of health insurance, services, and products.
- Health insurance policies that clearly describe the areas of coverage.

Acceptable verification shall not be limited to any single type of document and may be obtained through the household or other sources.

The household has primary responsibility for providing documentary evidence to support statements on the application and to resolve any questionable information. Households may supply documentary evidence in person, through the mail, through an electronic portal, or through an authorized representative; however, State agencies may not require households to present verification in person.

Eligibility workers must accept any reasonable documentary evidence provided by the household and must be primarily concerned with how adequately the verification proves the statements on the application.

Collateral contacts and home visits

Whenever documentary evidence cannot be obtained or is insufficient to make a firm determination of eligibility for the deduction or the amount of the deduction, the eligibility worker may require a collateral contact. Documentary evidence may be considered insufficient when the household presents bills that do not represent an accurate picture of the household's medical expenses (such as old bills).

A collateral contact is an oral confirmation of the household's expenses by a person outside of the household. The collateral contact may be made either in person or over the telephone. The eligibility worker may select a collateral contact if the household fails to designate one or designates one that is unacceptable to the eligibility worker. Examples of collateral contacts for medical expenses include:

- Billing personnel in the doctor's office or the hospital.
- Insurance agents.
- Nursing home or home health care providers.
- Medical equipment rental agencies.

When information obtained from a source outside of the household contradicts statements made by the household, the eligibility worker must give the household the opportunity to resolve the discrepancy prior to using the information to determine benefits. State agencies must also ensure compliance with all Federal and State privacy and patient rights laws in obtaining information from collateral contacts. The eligibility worker should document in the case file any information obtained from collateral contacts as well as how any discrepancies are resolved.

Home visits may be used as verification on a case-by-case basis when documentary evidence is insufficient to make a firm determination of eligibility or benefit level, or cannot be obtained. Home visits must be scheduled in advance with the household.

Missing verification

If a household does not have needed verification at the interview, the State agency must notify the household, offer to assist the household in obtaining required verification, and give 10 days for the household to provide the particular items of missing verification. It is a best practice for the eligibility worker to document in the case file when such assistance is offered to the client. If the household does not provide verification within the 10 days provided, the eligibility worker must determine benefits without allowing a deduction for the unverified medical expense. If the verification is provided later, the eligibility worker will allow the expense in accordance with the procedures for acting on reported changes.

Households entitled to expedited service are entitled to a medical expenses deduction if they list medical expense amounts even if verification of those expenses are postponed. The verification must be provided prior to the second month's issuance, or until the third month of participation in the case of households that applied after the 15th of the month and were assigned a 2-month or longer certification period. If an amount of an allowable expense is not known at this time or cannot be reasonably anticipated based upon available information about the recipient's medical condition and public or private medical insurance coverage, the State agency shall consider the non-reimbursable portion of the medical expense only when the amount of the expense or reimbursement is reported and verified.

If a State agency determines that a household does not want to deduct an expense, the expense becomes non-deductible and is not included in any calculation of net income. If the household later reports or verifies the expense, the State agency would then deduct it.

Are there any unique reporting and recertification requirements?

A household's monthly medical expenses deduction for the certification period is based on the information reported and verified by the household, and any anticipated changes in the household's medical expenses that can be reasonably expected to occur during the certification period based on available information about the recipient's medical condition, public or private insurance coverage, and current verified medical expenses. Under §273.10(d)(4), a State agency shall not require households to file reports or to report changes about medical expenses during the certification period.

Under §273.12(c), during the certification period, the State agency shall not act on changes in the medical expenses of households eligible for the medical expenses deduction which it learns of from a source other than the household and which, in order to take action, require the State agency to contact the household for verification. The State agency shall only act on those changes in medical expenses that it learns about from a source other than the household if those changes are verified upon receipt and do not require contact with the household.

A household may voluntarily report changes in medical expenses during the certification period. If so, under §273.2(f)(8)(ii), the eligibility worker shall verify a change if it will increase the allotment but may not verify total medical expenses that are unchanged or have changed by $25 or less, unless the information is incomplete, inaccurate, inconsistent, or outdated. The same restrictions on verification of previously unreported medical expenses and changes in total recurring medical expenses apply at recertification.

Under §273.10(d)(4), a State agency may either require verification prior to acting on the change, or require verification prior to the second normal monthly allotment after the change is reported. The State agency should specify in its State plan the option selected and apply the option consistently to all households. Regardless of which option is selected, in verifying a deductible expense, a State agency may not send the household a Request for Contact.

Under §273.12(c), if a household reports a change to an established deduction (other than a change in earnings or residence) during the first six months of the certification period that would affect the household's eligibility for, or amount of, the deduction, the State agency may choose to disregard the change and continue to provide the household the deduction amount that was established at certification until the household's next recertification or after the sixth month for households certified for 12 months. In the case of a household assigned a 24-month certification period because all adult members are elderly or disabled, the State agency must act on any disregarded changes reported during the first 12 months of the certification period at the required 12-month contact. Changes reported during the second 12 months of the certification period can be disregarded until the household's next recertification.

If a State agency fails to allow a deduction for an allowable expense that was reported in time for the State agency to make the deduction in the appropriate month(s), the household is entitled to restored benefits.

Knowledge check #2

1. An elderly household member submits receipts for purchase of a walker, wheelchair rental, three sessions of hydrotherapy (with a letter signed by a State-licensed doctor stating that this is necessary to help with mobility), and three name-brand prescription medications. The eligibility worker is skeptical about the effectiveness of hydrotherapy and believes that generic medications would have been just as effective and cost a lot less. What should the eligibility worker do in this situation?

2. A disabled household member submits the following receipts as out-of-pocket medical expenses: purchase of gas to drive to another county to fill a prescription, purchase of nutritional shake mix and fresh fruit (with a letter signed by a State-licensed physician stating that these items are necessary for the household member to maintain a healthy weight), and purchase of medical marijuana (with a prescription signed by the same physician). Which, if any, of these are allowable medical expenses?

3. A household with an elderly member is being recertified in May. The elderly member reports a new prescription expense of $10 a month. What information is the eligibility worker required to verify?

4. A household with a disabled member reports during the 8th month of a 12-month certification period a $30 increase in a medical expense during the certification period. What is the eligibility worker required to do?

Jump to answers.

Calculating the Deduction

After the eligibility worker has identified all the medical expenses the household incurs and which of those expenses are allowable, the eligibility worker will need to anticipate when the household will receive bills for their expenses, and when those expenses may be averaged.

Households may elect to have fluctuating expenses averaged. If a recurring monthly expense does not fluctuate, it would not be averaged. It will be allowed each month as billed. One-time medical expenses may be deducted in a lump sum or averaged forward over the balance of the certification period. The eligibility worker must watch for expenses that will be paid by insurance or another third party as those expenses are not deductible. The eligibility worker must also determine if the expenses are current or past due.

A State agency may establish procedures to allow the method of budgeting a medical expense to be changed in the middle of a certification period, such as to allow a household to stop averaging an expense and have the remaining balance deducted at one time. However, the State agency must ensure that no action is taken which would cause a deduction to be allowed for an overdue expense or which would cause a double deduction.

What is the amount of the excess medical expenses deduction?

Only those medical expenses incurred by an elderly or disabled household member in excess of $35 per month can be used as a deduction. The $35 applies to the total expenses incurred by all elderly or disabled household members; it does not apply to each person's expenses if more than one person in the household is elderly or disabled.

- If an eligible household incurs medical expenses of $100 a month, the eligibility worker would subtract $35 from the $100 and allow $65 as the medical expenses deduction.

- If fluctuating expenses or a one-time expense has been averaged over the certification period, the $35 is deducted from the monthly average each month.

- Per §273.10(e)(1)(ii)(B), in calculating net monthly income, a State agency may choose to include the cents associated with each individual medical cost in the computation of the medical expenses deduction and round the final medical expenses deduction amount.

When are billed medical expenses allowed to be deducted?

Except as described otherwise elsewhere in this section, a medical expense is only allowed in the month the expense is billed or otherwise becomes due, regardless of when or whether the household intends to pay the expense. "Or otherwise becomes due" may be interpreted to apply to situations in which a bill is received in one month, but the due date on the bill is in the following month. In these cases, the State agency may choose to allow the expense in either the month the bill is received or the month the expense is due. The option chosen by the State agency should be stated in its policy manual and applied in all cases.

Agreed-on monthly installments on one-time medical expenses are allowable in the month that each installment is due. Monthly installment arrangements do not need to be formal but should be verified if questionable. The expense is allowable even if the household was initially billed and an agreement plan set up before the certification period began.

Medical expenses billed on a charge account are considered billed when the statement is received. If the household does not pay off the balance by the first month due, subsequent monthly billings will be treated in the same manner as an installment plan. Amounts that are considered past due are never allowed and a particular expense may only be deducted once. The eligibility worker shall calculate a household's expenses based on the expenses the household expects to be billed for during the certification period.

How are unpaid and past due medical expenses treated?

Under §273.10(d)(2), medical expenses carried forward from past billing periods are not deductible, even if they are included with the most recent billing and actually paid by the household. In any event, a particular expense may only be deducted once.

Each State agency should establish guidelines for how eligibility workers determine when a bill is considered past due. For instance, a State agency might establish that a bill is past due if it is unpaid 30 days after the billing date. The guidelines must be applied consistently across the caseload.

Unpaid medical bills may be taken into consideration when determining a household's monthly medical expenses deduction for the certification period, provided that they are not past due.

What is the Standard Medical Deduction?

Standard Medical Deduction (SMD) demonstration projects allow State agencies to establish an assumed standard medical expense to replace actual costs of medical expenses for households in which an elderly or disabled member incurs medical expenses (excluding special diets) in excess of $35 a month.

The SMD makes it easier for seniors and disabled participants to qualify by decreasing their paperwork burden. Recipients of the SMD only have to provide verification that they have at least $35.01 in allowable medical expenses rather than documenting every expense to maximize their deduction. The SMD also increases administrative efficiency for State agencies by decreasing the number of medical expenses that must be verified.

Generally, SMD demo projects adjust the amount of the heating/cooling standard utility allowance (HCSUA) to offset the cost of implementing this demo and maintain cost neutrality. Regional Offices should contact the Program Design Branch at FNS' National Office to ensure that they have the most up-to-date template and program requirements for State agencies to use when requesting to run an SMD demonstration project.

How are medical expenses anticipated?

An eligibility worker must calculate a household's medical expenses based on the expenses the household expects to be billed for during the certification period. Anticipation of the expenses must be based on the most recent month's bills, unless the household is reasonably certain a change will occur. The eligibility worker shall not automatically average past month's bills as a method of anticipating future expenses.

An eligibility worker should thoroughly explore with the household any changes from past expenses and any new expenses that can be reasonably expected to occur during the certification period based on available information about the recipient's medical condition, public or private insurance coverage, and current verified medical expenses. Once the eligibility worker has anticipated all expenses, those expenses may be allowed in the month they are expected to be billed or otherwise become due, or they can be averaged over the remainder of the certification period if they fluctuate (see below).

Under §273.10(d)(1)(i), any expense that is reported and can be reasonably anticipated based on available information about the recipient's medical condition and public or private medical insurance coverage, can be used to calculate the deduction. Therefore, if the household has met its deductible or the eligibility worker has verified that the household's insurance policy only pays 80 percent of all further expenses, the eligibility worker may anticipate that the insurance will pay 80 percent of the future expenses and allow 20 percent of those anticipated expenses as a deduction.

How are medical expenses averaged?

Fluctuating medical expenses

Fluctuating medical expenses may be allowed as deductions if regularly recurring, reasonably anticipated, and verified. Households may elect to have fluctuating expenses averaged or have them deducted in the months they are billed or otherwise become due. If a recurring monthly expense does not fluctuate, it would not be averaged. It will be allowed each month the expense is billed or otherwise becomes due. For instance, if a household incurs a $50 a month expense for rental of medical equipment, the eligibility worker would simply allow the actual expense each month, rather than averaging the expense.

Expenses billed less often than monthly

Households may elect to have expenses that are billed less often than monthly averaged forward over the interval between scheduled billings. If a bill is averaged over the interval between billings, the expense can be allowed even if the bill was not received in the certification period. If there is no regularly scheduled billing interval, the expense may be averaged forward over the period the expense is intended to cover.

One-time only expenses

At certification, households may also elect to have one-time only expenses averaged forward over the entire certification period in which they are billed. Households reporting one-time only medical expenses during the certification period may elect to have a one-time deduction or to have the expense averaged over the remainder of the certification period. Averaging begins the month the reported change becomes effective. When a household elects to average a one-time medical expense, the household medical expense is averaged over the remaining months of the certification period, and $35 is deducted from the average each month.

Households certified for 24 months

In the case of a household certified for 24 months that reports a one-time medical expense incurred during the first 12 months of the certification period, the State agency must give the household the option of deducting the expense for one month, averaging the expense over the remainder of the first 12 months of the certification period, or averaging the expense over the remaining months in the certification period. One-time expenses reported after the 12th month of the certification period will be deducted in one month or averaged over the remaining months in the certification period, at the household's option.

How are reimbursements for medical expenses treated?

Any medical expense that will be covered by a third-party reimbursement or an excluded vendor payment shall not be allowed as a deduction. In addition, an expense which will be covered by an excluded vendor payment that has been converted to a direct cash payment under the approval of a federally authorized demonstration project shall not be deductible.

That portion of an allowable medical expense which is not reimbursable can be included as part of the household's medical expenses. If the household reports an allowable medical expense at the time of certification but cannot provide verification at that time, and if the amount of the expense cannot be reasonably anticipated based on available information about the recipient's medical condition and public or private medical insurance coverage, no deduction can be allowed until the reimbursable portion of the medical expenses is verified, no matter how long it takes to obtain proof of the reimbursement and the expense to the household. The household will have the nonreimbursable portion of the expense considered at the time the amount of the reimbursement is received or can otherwise be verified.

Note that this only applies to expenses subject to reimbursement. If the household has expenses that the eligibility worker is sure will not be reimbursed, the expenses may be allowed prior to verification.

How are medical expenses deductions calculated for residents of group living arrangements?

Group living arrangements (GLAs), described in section 3(m)(5)(B) of the Act, are public or nonprofit homes for individuals who are disabled or blind. Residents of GLAs are entitled to the medical expenses deduction for the medical costs they incur in excess of $35 per month. In some cases, it may be challenging to determine a medical expenses deduction. The eligibility worker should first attempt to have the GLA separately identify allowable medical expenses. If the GLA can provide this information, this will be the amount used to calculate the deduction. If the amount paid for medical costs cannot be separately identified, no deduction is allowed for the costs.

Some GLAs may charge a basic rate for room and board and then have a higher rate depending on the amount of medical care a resident may need. In such instances, if a person is charged a higher rate, the basic rate minus the SNAP maximum allotment for a one-person household may be used to determine the shelter costs for that person, and the difference between the basic rate and the higher rate may be used to determine the medical expenses deduction.

These procedures apply to residents making their own payments and to those instances where a protective payee is handling the payments but is using the resident's own funds.

How is the Medicaid spend-down treated?

The Medicaid spend-down program is for people who are not income- or resource-eligible for Medicaid but who suffer from a catastrophic illness or otherwise require ongoing high medical expenses. Once the household has a certain level of expenses compared to the household's available resources, the household can get some expenses paid under the spend-down program. There is no provision for restored benefits once the spend-down has been met unless the eligibility worker erred.

Each State has its own method of determining eligibility and calculating the amount of the Medicaid spend-down and the period it is intended to cover. Because of this, it is not possible to address every possible scenario specifically. The general rule is, however, that expenses less than the spend-down amount should be viewed as an out-of-pocket medical expense, like any other, and allowed for SNAP deduction purposes.

How should case files be documented?

Case files must be documented in sufficient detail so that a reviewer can determine the reasonableness and accuracy of the eligibility, ineligibility, benefit level, and other determinations. In documenting the excess medical expenses deduction, eligibility workers must thoroughly document all verification obtained and the time period covered by the medical expenses. Other examples of documentation include the following:

- The household members entitled to the medical expenses deduction and the verification obtained to prove that entitlement.
- The source of verification, which expenses are allowable, and which expenses are not allowable (i.e., if the expense is not an allowable expense or is past due, etc.).
- Treatment of reimbursements, when the verification for reimbursement was received, or verification that reimbursements are not applicable.
- The determination to average and the time periods over which the expenses have been averaged.
- Any non-cooperation by the household, or the non-receipt of any requested verification.
- The determination that information provided by the household appeared incomplete, inaccurate, inconsistent, or outdated. If verification received from someone outside of the household was inconsistent with the household's statements, document why the information was considered inconsistent and how the issue was resolved.
- If the household reports an expense but chooses not to have it included as a deduction, that fact should be documented.

- If a household needs to provide missing verification, document the date verification was requested and the type of verification needed. Document the date verification was received. If the household does not provide the verification, document that fact to support subsequent action.

Knowledge Check #3

1. An eligible household elects to average a one-time medical expense of $300 over the next three months, which is the remainder of the certification period. How does the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

2. A household consists of a husband and wife who are both over age 65. The husband incurs $100 a month in expenses. The wife incurs $55 a month. How does the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

3. A household has recurring medical expenses for which the household is billed quarterly on January 1, April 1, etc. The household applies in February. How does the eligibility worker average the quarterly billing amount?

4. A household with an elderly member was certified from January through December. The elderly person was hospitalized in June, received a bill, and reported the expense in the middle of the certification period. How does the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

5. An eligible household has total medical expenses of $635 and third-party liability (health insurance). The household receives the bill for $635 in February. In June, the insurance company pays $400 of the bill. The household is then responsible for paying the remaining $235. How should the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

Answers to Knowledge Checks

Knowledge Check #1

1. A child is disabled by Social Security standards and receiving SSI benefits due to her disability. After the death of her father, she begins receiving Social Security death benefits based on her father's work history. Because the death benefits are higher, her SSI benefits are terminated. Is the child still eligible to receive a SNAP deduction for her medical expenses?

   Answer: No, if the child's eligibility for the medical expenses deduction was based on receipt of SSI benefits and she does not meet any other criteria for a determination of disability under SNAP regulations.

2. A 70-year-old woman was living with her 40-year-old daughter. They had separate SNAP households. The mother is admitted for long-term care in the hospital, so her case is closed. The daughter is making sporadic payments for hospital costs. May the daughter claim a medical expenses deduction for her mother's hospital expenses?

   Answer: No. The daughter is not allowed to claim a medical expenses deduction for her mother's costs because they were separate households before the costs were incurred.

3. An elderly husband and wife were not participating in SNAP. The husband goes to the hospital in September. The wife applies for SNAP benefits in October. May the wife claim a medical expenses deduction for her husband's hospital expenses?

   Answer: Yes. The husband's expenses can be allowed because he would have been required to be a part of his wife's household.

4. A household applies in January and is certified through December. One of the members will turn 60 in March and has allowable medical expenses. When should the expenses be deducted?

   Answer: No expenses would be allowed in January and February. The eligibility worker would determine medical expenses anticipated for March and subsequent months and compute benefits for March through the rest of the certification period based on those expenses.

Knowledge Check #2

1. An elderly household member submits receipts for purchase of a walker, wheelchair rental, three sessions of hydrotherapy (with a letter signed by a State-licensed doctor stating that this is necessary to help with mobility), and three name-brand prescription medications. The eligibility worker is skeptical about the effectiveness of hydrotherapy and believes that generic medications would have been just as effective and cost a lot less. What should the eligibility worker do in this situation?

   Answer: Under §273.9(d)(3)(iii)(A), the costs of the walker and the wheelchair rental are allowable deductions. SNAP regulations do not allow the eligibility worker to evaluate whether a prescribed treatment is appropriate or necessary for an individual's medical condition; the eligibility worker must instead evaluate whether the hydrotherapy and prescription medications were prescribed or approved by a State-licensed practitioner or qualified health professional as determined by State definitions or authorities, and verify the expenses in accordance with SNAP regulations.

2. A disabled household member submits the following receipts as out-of-pocket medical expenses: purchase of gas to drive to another county to fill a prescription, purchase of nutritional shake mix and fresh fruit (with a letter signed by a State-licensed physician stating that these items are necessary for the household member to maintain a healthy weight), and purchase of medical marijuana (with a prescription signed by the same physician). Which, if any, of these are allowable medical expenses?

   Answer: Under §273.9(d)(3), the reasonable costs of transportation to obtain medical treatment or services is deductible (including trips to a pharmacy or other location to fill prescriptions). The eligibility worker should calculate the deductible amount based on the mileage driven to the pharmacy and the transportation rate established by the State agency. The nutritional shake mix is not allowable because it is a nutritional supplement and therefore a special diet, and the fresh fruit is not allowable because it is an item that could otherwise be purchased with SNAP benefits. The medical marijuana is prohibited under §273.9(d)(3)(iii)(B).

3. A household with an elderly member is being recertified in May. The elderly member reports a new prescription expense of $10 a month. What information is the eligibility worker required to verify?

   Answer: Under §273.2(f)(8)(ii), an eligibility worker shall verify a change if it will increase the allotment but may not verify total medical expenses that are unchanged or have changed by $25 or less, unless the information is incomplete, inaccurate, inconsistent, or outdated. Even though this change might increase the allotment, the new expense is under $25 so the eligibility worker is not required to verify it unless the information provided is incomplete, inaccurate, inconsistent, or outdated.

4. A household with a disabled member reports during the 8th month of a 12-month certification period a $30 increase in a medical expense during the certification period. What is the eligibility worker required to do?

   Answer: Under §273.2(f)(8)(ii), an eligibility worker shall verify a change if it will increase the allotment but may not verify total medical expenses that are unchanged or have changed by $25 or less, unless the information is incomplete, inaccurate, inconsistent, or outdated. The eligibility worker is required to act on the change because it is a medical expense change reported by the household that would result in an increase in the household's benefit allotment. The eligibility worker must either require verification prior to acting on the change, or require verification prior to the second normal monthly allotment after the change is reported, depending on the option chosen by the State agency.

Knowledge Check #3

1. An eligible household elects to average a one-time medical expense of $300 over the next three months, which is the remainder of the certification period. How does the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

   Answer: The eligibility worker would divide $300 by 3 months to get $100 per month and then would subtract $35 each month, so the averaged expense would be $65 for each of the next three months.

2. A household consists of a husband and wife who are both over age 65. The husband incurs $100 a month in expenses. The wife incurs $55 a month. How does the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

   Answer: The eligibility worker would add these expenses together to get $155 and then subtract the $35, leaving the household with a deduction of $120 a month.

3. A household has recurring medical expenses for which the household is billed quarterly on January 1, April 1, etc. The household applies in February. How does the eligibility worker average the quarterly billing amount?

   Answer: The eligibility worker would average the quarterly billing amount over the months of January, February, and March to determine the monthly average of medical expenses. The eligibility worker would apply this monthly average to the months of

February and March. This averaged amount would not be applied to January as the household was not participating in SNAP at that time.

4. A household with an elderly member was certified from January through December. The elderly person was hospitalized in June, received a bill, and reported the expense in the middle of the certification period. How does the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

   Answer: The household is reporting a one-time only medical expense during the certification period that will not be paid by a third party, such as insurance. The household may elect to have a one-time deduction of the full amount or have the entire expense averaged over the remaining months of the certification, since averaging begins the month the change would become effective.

5. An eligible household has total medical expenses of $635 and third-party liability (health insurance). The household receives the bill for $635 in February. In June, the insurance company pays $400 of the bill. The household is then responsible for paying the remaining $235. How should the eligibility worker calculate the deduction?

   Answer: After verification of the reimbursed amount, the eligibility worker can allow a medical expenses deduction of $200 ($235 - $35). This amount can be allowed in one lump sum of $200 in the month it is verified or the $235 expense can be averaged over the remainder of the certification period (minus $35 each month).

Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) Excess Medical Expenses Deduction

Can I deduct medical expenses in SNAP?

If you are elderly or disabled, you may deduct (subtract) certain medical expenses from your SNAP income calculation. These expenses must be paid by you. You cannot deduct anything paid for by insurance or someone else. This deduction may help you get SNAP or get more SNAP benefits.

Am I elderly?

In SNAP, you are elderly if you are 60 years or older.

Am I disabled?

In SNAP, you are disabled if you meet ONE of the following criteria:

- You receive Federal disability or blindness payments under the Social Security Act, including Supplemental Security Income (SSI) or Social Security disability or blindness payments. OR
- You receive State disability or blindness payments based on SSI rules. OR
- You receive a disability retirement benefit from a governmental agency because of a permanent disability. OR
- You receive an annuity under the Railroad Retirement Act and are eligible for Medicare or are considered disabled under SSI. OR
- You are a veteran who is totally disabled, permanently homebound, or in need of regular aid and attendance. OR
- You are the surviving spouse or child of a veteran who is receiving VA benefits and is considered permanently disabled.

How much can I deduct?

Add together all of your monthly out-of-pocket medical expenses and subtract $35. You may deduct whatever amount remains.

What kinds of medical expenses can I deduct?

You may deduct most medical expenses that are prescribed by a State-licensed or qualified health professional.

Examples of deductible medical expenses include:

- Doctor and dentist bills, including psychotherapy and rehabilitation.
- Prescription drugs and doctor-approved over-the-counter medication, including insulin.
- Dentures, hearing aids, eye glasses, and prosthetics.
- Medical equipment such as bandages, colostomy bags, insulin test strips, and walkers.
- Inpatient and outpatient hospital expenses, including nursing care.
- Reasonable costs of transportation and lodging to get medical treatment or services.
- Attendant care or home health aide costs.
- Health insurance premiums and Medicaid cost-sharing or spend down expenses.
- The costs of specially trained service animals, including maintenance costs.

Are there expenses I cannot deduct?

You may not deduct the costs of special diets, even if they are prescribed by a doctor. Examples of special diets are liquid diets, nutritional supplements, and any item that can be purchased with SNAP benefits, including prescribed foods.

How will my caseworker calculate my deduction?

Depending on your State, your caseworker will either apply a standard deduction from your income or calculate your deduction based on the medical expenses you anticipate being billed for during your certification period. Your caseworker will consider your most recent month's medical bills and discuss with you whether those expenses are likely to remain the same. Your caseworker will explain options you have in calculating medical expenses that repeat or vary monthly.

Will I have to provide proof of my expenses?

You must provide proof (verification) to support your SNAP application and to answer questions has about your medical expenses or insurance payments. Your caseworker will give you a list of the types of verification you can provide.

What do I tell my caseworker at recertification?

When you recertify for benefits, tell your caseworker about any changes to your medical expenses. You do not have to file reports about medical expenses during your certification period.

Who can help me with my SNAP case?

For specific information about SNAP in your State or for questions about your SNAP case, please contact your local office. To find your local office, visit: https://www.fns.usda.gov/snap/state-directory.

10 Facts about the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) Excess Medical Expenses Deduction

1. You must be elderly or disabled to be allowed to deduct (subtract) certain medical expenses from your SNAP income calculation.
2. You may only deduct the cost of medical expenses you pay out-of-pocket and that are more than $35 a month when added together.
3. You may deduct most medical expenses that are prescribed by a State-licensed or qualified health professional.
4. You may deduct the reasonable costs of transportation and lodging to get medical treatment or services.
5. You may deduct the cost of health insurance premiums and Medicaid cost-sharing or spend down expenses.
6. You may not deduct the costs of special diets, even if they are prescribed by a doctor.
7. You may not deduct the cost of any item that can be purchased with SNAP benefits, including prescribed foods.
8. You must provide proof (verification) to support your SNAP application and to resolve any questions your caseworker has about your medical expenses or insurance payments.
9. You do not have to file reports about medical expenses during your certification period.

Justice Department Finds Arizona's Department of Child Safety Discriminated Against Parents and Children with Disabilities

Introduction:

This exhibit contains a comprehensive article detailing the findings of the U.S. Department of Justice regarding the Arizona Department of Child Safety's systemic discrimination against parents and children with disabilities.

The investigation revealed violations of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), highlighting failures to provide reasonable accommodations and equal access to services, as well as discriminatory practices that disproportionately harmed families with disabilities.

This exhibit is included to emphasize the broader pattern of systemic discrimination against individuals with disabilities in government systems, underscoring the relevance of the ADA, Olmstead Act principles, and the necessity for compliance and accountability at all levels.

The parallels between the issues presented in this article and the discrimination and systemic failures detailed in this case further substantiate the claims of pervasive ADA violations and related harm.

Justice Department finds Arizona's Department of Child Safety discriminated against parents and children with disabilities

Posted on December 16, 2024

The Justice Department announced its findings that Arizona's Department of Child Safety (DCS) violates the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) by discriminating against parents, including foster parents and other caregivers, and children with disabilities.

DCS did not communicate effectively with parents and children with hearing disabilities and failed to reasonably accommodate the needs of parents with disabilities by, for example, not providing information in an easy-to-understand form. It also denied parents with disabilities an equal chance to participate in DCS services.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
Case No. 3:24-cv-09325-AMO

NOTICE OF SUBMISSION OF EXHIBIT 10
SYSTEMIC INCONSISTENCIES IN MEDICAL RECORD SYSTEMS AND THEIR IMPACT ON INDIVIDUALS WITH RARE OR COMPLEX CONDITIONS

TO THE HONORABLE COURT, ALL PARTIES, AND THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD:

Plaintiff John R. Fouts hereby submits Exhibit 10 as evidence supporting claims and motions previously filed in this case. This exhibit directly relates to the following docket entries:

1. Docket Entry 4 - MOTION for Preliminary Injunction: Exhibit 10 demonstrates systemic failures that have directly contributed to barriers in accessing appropriate medical care, exacerbating the urgency for injunctive relief.
2. Docket Entry 14 - First MOTION to Compel Defendants to Accommodate Disability Needs under the ADA: The exhibit highlights the critical impact of inconsistent medical records on the ability to receive ADA-mandated accommodations.
3. Docket Entry 28 - EXHIBIT-UNJUST-LEASE-TERMINATION-HOUSING-CRISIS-VIOLATIONS-ADA-OLMSTEAD: The exhibit underscores systemic discrimination, which disproportionately affects those with disabilities in housing and healthcare.
4. Docket Entry 35 - EXHIBIT LONG COVID MICROCLOTS AND RELATED HEALTH MATTERS INVOLVED IN CHRONIC AND COMPLEX ILLNESS: The inconsistencies outlined in Exhibit 10 create significant barriers to effectively treating complex health conditions.
5. Docket Entry 36 - EXHIBIT-USDA-FNS-SNAP-Guide-To-Medical-Deductions-Handbook: Accurate medical records are essential for substantiating claims for federally mandated benefits, as evidenced in this docket entry.

SUMMARY OF EXHIBIT 10

Exhibit 10 contains examples of systemic inconsistencies in medical record systems, both across different organizations and within the same organization. These inconsistencies include:

- Missing or incomplete diagnoses and symptoms.

- Discrepancies in record formats and access policies.
- Lack of transparency for patients, including restrictions on viewing official diagnoses.

These issues disproportionately harm individuals with rare or complex conditions, obstructing access to timely, necessary care.

REQUEST FOR COURT ACTION

Given the widespread harm caused by these inconsistencies, Plaintiff respectfully requests the Court to:

1. Mandate Corrective Action: Order all named defendants and their affiliates to implement consistent, accurate, and accessible medical record-keeping practices.
2. Ensure Compliance: Require regular audits and reporting to prevent future harm.
3. Address Plaintiff-Specific Issues: Directly engage with Plaintiff to resolve discrepancies and correct inaccuracies in his medical records.

ADA REQUEST

As a disabled individual, Plaintiff requires all communications to be provided in writing via email, fax, and USPS mail to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Plaintiff has substantial disabilities, including but not limited to chronic fatigue syndrome, small fiber neuropathy, and long COVID with confirmed microclots. These accommodations are essential for ensuring timely, accessible communication in this matter.

RIGHT TO AMEND

Plaintiff reserves the right to amend or supplement this submission as further evidence, developments, or arguments become available.

Date: 2025-01-14

EXHIBIT-HEAVY-POLICE-PRESENCE-AT-STATION-JTOWN-VIDA-MANAGEMENT-UNEXPLAINED-AND-UNSETTLING-SAFETY-CONCERNS

Introduction:

This exhibit documents instances of heavy police presence at the Station JTown apartment complex (9601 Balsam Way, Jeffersontown, Louisville, KY 40299), with no explanations or information provided to residents. These incidents, including one on November 17, 2024, occurred months after a murder in June 2024 within the same area. Despite inquiries, no crime reports or public information were available, leaving residents in the dark about the nature of these events.

The unexplained and repeated police presence creates a climate of fear and insecurity, especially for vulnerable residents such as the disabled and those with special needs. For myself, a disabled parent, and my special needs, autistic, transgender child, the lack of communication exacerbates feelings of unsafety and mistrust toward management and authorities.

Key Points:

1. Unexplained Police Activity: Multiple police SUVs were observed in the area on several occasions with no transparency or updates provided to residents.
2. Proximity to Residents: Photographic evidence illustrates the closeness of the police activity to the living spaces of residents, including views directly from apartment windows.
3. Impact on Vulnerable Populations: These events contribute to heightened fear and anxiety for disabled residents and their families, undermining a sense of safety and stability.
4. Violation of Trust: The absence of communication from property management and law enforcement raises concerns about accountability and transparency.
5. Potential Legal Implications: Lack of disclosure may implicate civil rights concerns under ADA provisions related to ensuring safe and informed living environments for disabled residents.

This exhibit supports claims of mismanagement and negligence by Station JTown and its management company, further demonstrating the harmful living conditions perpetuated by their practices.

EXHIBIT INDEX

Exhibit Title: Heavy Police Presence at Station JTown: Unexplained and Ongoing Safety Concerns
Plaintiff: John R. Fouts
Case Number: 24-CV-03925-AMO
Exhibit Filing Date: January 15, 2025

Relevant Docket Items:

1. Docket #4: Motion for Preliminary Injunction
    - This motion emphasizes the urgency of addressing systemic issues, including unexplained police activities and retaliatory conduct that create unsafe and discriminatory conditions.
2. Docket #14: Motion to Compel ADA Accommodations
    - The failure to communicate clearly regarding police activity or provide ADA-mandated written explanations contributes to ongoing procedural harm.
3. Docket #28: Exhibit on Unjust Lease Termination and Housing Crisis
    - The police presence may be linked to retaliatory actions, underscoring broader housing discrimination and safety issues.
4. Docket #30: Exhibit on Mail Tracking Records Demonstrating Neglect
    - Demonstrates neglect in addressing Plaintiff's critical communications, paralleling the lack of transparency in explaining police presence.
5. Docket #31: Emergency Motion to Reassign Case
    - Highlights the urgency of addressing systemic barriers, including the unexplained police presence, under a new judicial assignment.
6. Docket #38: Exhibit on Systemic Failures in Healthcare Documentation
    - Connects procedural neglect in healthcare systems to the procedural neglect in addressing Plaintiff's housing and safety concerns.

SUPPLEMENTAL SHEET: SYSTEMIC CONNECTIONS

The unexplained heavy police presence at Station JTown raises significant concerns about systemic retaliatory and discriminatory practices. These incidents are not isolated but are part of broader patterns of harm caused by procedural neglect, as illustrated in related docket items. Below is a detailed summary:

1. Docket #4 (Motion for Preliminary Injunction)
   The police presence contributes to a hostile and unsafe environment, escalating stress and health risks for the Plaintiff. This urgent matter supports the need for immediate injunctive relief.
2. Docket #14 (Motion to Compel ADA Accommodations)
   The lack of transparency and failure to provide written explanations violates ADA provisions, particularly regarding accessible communication for individuals with disabilities.
3. Docket #28 (Exhibit on Unjust Lease Termination and Housing Crisis)
   The timing and pattern of police activities align with retaliatory actions following Plaintiff's advocacy for federally guaranteed rights.
4. Docket #30 (Exhibit on Mail Tracking Records Demonstrating Neglect)
   The absence of clear responses or documentation regarding police presence parallels the broader failure to acknowledge or act on Plaintiff's formal communications.
5. Docket #31 (Emergency Motion to Reassign Case)
   Judicial reassignment is critical to addressing systemic barriers, including the unexplained police activities, which exemplify ongoing harm and neglect.
6. Docket #38 (Exhibit on Systemic Failures in Healthcare Documentation)
   Similar to inconsistencies in healthcare documentation, the unexplained police presence reflects systemic procedural failures that disproportionately harm individuals with disabilities.

ADA Accommodations Statement

This exhibit underscores the need for ADA-mandated accommodations, including written explanations for all actions taken by Station J-Town a Vida-Management, Inc. property.

Procedural harm caused by noncompliance violates federal laws protecting individuals with disabilities.

Reserve Rights Clause

The Plaintiff reserves all rights to amend or supplement this exhibit as additional evidence becomes available. The ongoing retaliatory and discriminatory actions necessitate continuous documentation.

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY, et al.,

Defendants.

Case No. 24-cv-09325-AMO

ORDER TRANSFERRING ACTION TO WESTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY

Re: Dkt. Nos. 1, 4

Before the Court are pro se Plaintiff John R. Fouts and his minor child's complaint, motion for preliminary injunction, permanent restraining order, and permanent protective order ("Motion"), and several other filings and requests.[1] ECF 1, 4. Fouts and his child are residents of Kentucky who suffer from multiple medical conditions. ECF 4 at 3. Fouts alleges dozens of statutory and constitutional violations against myriad Kentucky and federal agencies apparently arising from, among other things, alleged failure to receive social security checks and prescription drugs by mail, exposure to mold and other hazardous conditions in Fouts's dwelling and subsequent inability to obtain adequate medical care, as well as being subject to an improper Child Protective Services investigation, all in Kentucky. See id. at 8-35. Having read Fouts's papers and carefully considered the arguments therein, as well as the relevant legal authority, the Court hereby TRANSFERS this action to the Western District of Kentucky pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406, or alternatively, 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a), for the following reasons.

[1] Since initiating this lawsuit, Fouts has filed a series of additional documents, including a "Motion to Compel Compliance with ADA Accommodations," ECF 14, "Ophthalmological Records Highlighting Critical Unmet Medical Needs," ECF 16, "HUD Correspondence Highlighting Systemic Failures, Discrimination, ADA Violations, and Neglect," ECF 17, and "Notification of Use of Artificial Intelligence in Document Drafting," ECF 19, among others. Because the Court finds it appropriate to transfer the case, it does not address these filings.

On December 23, 2024, the Court issued an order to show cause why the complaint should not be dismissed or transferred for improper venue, as no party or event described in Fouts's papers had any apparent connection to the Northern District of California. ECF 12. Venue is proper in a judicial district in which (1) any defendant resides, if all defendants are residents of the state in which the district is located; (2) a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred, or a substantial part of property that is the subject of the action is situated; or (3) if there is no district in which an action may otherwise be brought as provided in this section, any judicial district in which any defendant is subject to the court's personal jurisdiction with respect to such action. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b). Similarly, where a defendant is an agency of the United States, venue is proper "in any judicial district in which (A) a defendant in the action resides, (B) a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred, or a substantial part of property that is the subject of the action is situated, or (C) the plaintiff resides if no real property is involved in the action." 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1).

A district court, in its discretion, "shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, transfer" an action under 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) if venue is improper. See King v. Russell, 963 F.2d 1301, 1304 (9th Cir. 1992). Courts may sua sponte raise improper venue if, as here, the defendant has not filed a responsive pleading and the parties are provided with an opportunity to respond to the issue. Costlow v. Weeks, 790 F.2d 1486, 1488 (9th Cir. 1986). Even where venue is proper under § 1391, a district court may transfer the case to another district for the convenience of the parties and witnesses. See 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) ("For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought."). The purpose of such transfer is to "prevent the waste of 'time, energy and money' and to 'protect litigants, witnesses, and the public against unnecessary inconvenience and expense.' " Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612 (1964). Courts may also transfer cases under § 1404(a) sua sponte.

Venue is not proper in this District. Fouts and his child reside in Louisville, Kentucky, as do many Defendants.[2] Moreover, as far as the Court can discern from Fouts's submissions, all relevant events and omissions occurred in Kentucky. See, e.g., ECF 4 at 14 (stating that Fouts and his child suffered significant harm due to hazardous living conditions at an apartment with a Louisville, Kentucky address); id. at 22-25 (describing inadequate care by medical care providers at Baptist Health Louisville and University of Louisville). In his response to the Court's Order, Fouts does not assert that any Plaintiff or Kentucky agency or individual establishes proper venue in this District, nor does he state that any events or omissions occurred in this District. To the extent Fouts suggests that venue is proper here because some Defendants are federal agencies, that is not so. "Venue does not lie in every judicial district where a federal agency has a regional office," Williams v. United States, No. C-01-0024 EDL, 2001 WL 1352885, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 23, 2001) (citing Reuben H. Donnelly Corp. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 580 F.2d 264, 267 (7th Cir. 1978)), and courts in the Ninth Circuit have often found that federal agencies are deemed residents of the District of Columbia, regardless of where any regional offices may be located. See, e.g., Al Hada v. Pompeo, Case No. CV 18-8002-DMG (JPRx), 2018 WL 6264999, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 17, 2018) (denying motion for preliminary injunction where venue was improper against federal agency defendants); Tsi Akim Maidu of Taylorsville Rancheria v. United States Dep't of Interior, Case No. 16-cv-07189-LB, 2017 WL 2289203, at *2 (N.D. Cal. May 25, 2017) (explaining that "[g]enerally, all federal defendants reside in Washington, D.C.," and "[v]enue does not lie in every judicial district where a federal agency has a regional office" (citations and internal quotation marks omitted)). While Fouts states that "[n]ationwide programs are directly implicated, and their administration in California is relevant to this case," ECF 15 at 1, Fouts's submissions do not allege any such relevance, and the Court cannot discern any. Fouts reiterates the urgency of his situation and past experiences of discrimination in Kentucky, but such factors do not establish proper venue here. Plaintiffs and many Defendants reside in Louisville, Kentucky, which is also where the relevant events occurred. Because no party resides in this District, and because the events giving rise to Fouts's claims did not occur here, the Court thus determines that under 28 U.S.C. § 1391, venue is not proper.

[2] Fouts filed a 22-page exhibit to his Motion listing dozens of Defendants. ECF 15-4. While the residence of each Defendant is not expressly alleged in Fouts's complaint or otherwise listed in Fouts's submissions, Fouts lists Louisville, Kentucky addresses for many Defendants. See id. at 19-20. Indeed, every address listed for a Defendant is an address outside of California, and as to those Defendants for whom no address is listed, there is no discernable connection to California.

The Court must next determine if it would be in the interest of justice to transfer the case. See 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a). "[T]ransfer will generally be in the interest of justice." Amity Rubberized Pen Co. v. Mkt. Quest Grp. Inc., 793 F.3d 991, 996 (9th Cir. 2015) (internal quotations omitted) (noting the Ninth Circuit has "rarely found that transfer would not serve the interests of justice," and that the determination of whether transfer is in the interest of justice is "a low bar" that "will usually involve a very limited inquiry by the transferring court"). The Court concludes from its limited inquiry that transfer is in the interest of justice so that Fouts's case may be screened pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915. Accordingly, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a), the Court TRANSFERS this action to the Western District of Kentucky, the proper venue for Louisville, Kentucky. Even if venue were proper in this District, because most parties reside in the Western District of Kentucky and the events at issue occurred there, it is clear that the Western District of Kentucky is a more convenient forum under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a).

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Exhibit

Systemic Failures of LMHA and Station JTown in Compliance with Federal Standards

INTRODUCTION:

This exhibit presents documented evidence of systemic failures by Station J-Town, a Vida-Management, Inc. property formerly known as Chestnut Ridge Apartments under the jurisdiction of the Louisville Metro Housing Authority (LMHA), in meeting housing inspection standards.

The records reveal multiple failed inspections, delays in corrective actions, and adverse impacts on tenants reliant on Housing Choice Voucher programs. These documents underscore persistent non-compliance with federal standards, neglect of obligations under the ADA, and patterns of discriminatory and retaliatory practices.

This exhibit correlates directly with previous submissions highlighting LMHA and HUD violations and serves as further evidence of systemic issues requiring immediate federal oversight and action.

Relevant Docket Items and Exhibit Tie-Ins

Docket Items:

The following docket items are directly tied to the evidence presented in this exhibit:

1. Item 7 - Summary of ADA-related claims and LMHA failures.
2. Item 14 - Overview of retaliatory practices and their impact on federally guaranteed housing rights.
3. Item 23 - Prior documentation of non-compliance by Station J-Town, Vida-Management Inc. property formerly known as Chestnut Ridge Apartments, management, and LMHA and HUD.
4. Item 30 - Federal claims relating to discrimination and failure to accommodate disabilities in housing.

Exhibit

Systemic Failures of LMHA and Station JTown in Compliance with Federal Standards

CONTEXT:

This exhibit ties into these docket items by providing concrete, detailed examples of how LMHA's failure to enforce federal housing standards and address violations has adversely affected the health and safety of tenants. It also illustrates a broader pattern of systemic neglect requiring immediate corrective actions.

Failed Inspection Notice: Please be Present for Re-Inspection

Your prior inspection has failed. Please (1) fix your violations and (2) be present for your next inspection.
Location: 2904 SITKA DR 29, JEFFERSONTOWN, KY 40299
Your Next Inspection is Scheduled For: 04/29/2024
Time: between 8:00 AM and 4:00 PM.
If you have any questions about your next inspection please call 502.574.3619

An inspection of the property located at 2904 SITKA DR 29, JEFFERSONTOWN, KY 40299 was conducted to determine if the unit met the required Housing Quality Standards and the Louisville Metro Property Maintenance Code and all other applicable ordinances. On Thursday, March 28, 2024 a ANNUAL/INTERIM INSPECTION was conducted and the inspection Failed. Please see the following pages for details of the violations and above for your next inspection date.

Violations must be corrected by dates indicated on the attached list for inspection the following working day. On date listed, in the grey box above, an inspection will be done between 8:00 AM and 4:00 PM. The inspector MUST be able to gain entry to the unit to verify that the violations were corrected.

The inspector has attempted to assign a responsible party to each violation based upon their observations. However, the final determination rests between the owner and tenant. All violations must be corrected to bring the unit into compliance with Housing Quality Standards. Payments and/or program participation may be suspended for continued noncompliance.

Please be advised: If the violations are not corrected by dates listed on each violation your housing assistance payments could be abated. If this is the case, the Housing authority will contact you.

If you have questions about your assistance, other than inspection information, please call 569-6060 and not the number listed above.

NOTICE: On January 31,2022 HUD published PIH Notice 2022-01. This notice requires all units receiving HUD funding which have a fuel-burning appliance, fuel-burning fireplace, fuel-burning furnace, fuel-burning water heater, and/or attached garage to have Carbon Monoxide (CO) detector(s) installed in the unit. HUD will enforce this, beginning December 27, 2022. Please ensure compliance with this directive in advance of that date.

Units constructed after January 1, 2019, require hard-wired detectors. Units constructed prior to this date may substitute 10-year lithium battery detectors.

Dear John Fouts and New Chestnut Ridge Apartments LLC:
RE: Suspension and Loss of Assistance Payments for Unit Noncompliance for:
2904 Sitka Dr 29 Louisville, KY 40299

LANDLORD FAILED 2ND INSPECTION & FACED LOSS OF PMT → LOSING ONE REASON FOR RESTRICTION & DISCRIMINATION

We recently received a copy of the letter sent to you by the Dept. of Codes & Regulations to advise you that the unit referenced above failed a second consecutive Annual or Complaint Inspection for the Housing Choice Voucher program. Currently the unit does not meet program requirements for participation in the Housing Choice Voucher program. However, we are going to delay removal of this unit from the program and are providing you a final opportunity to repair this unit. Please be advised that payments for this unit have been temporarily suspended and no further payments will be made until confirmation that repairs have been made is provided as noted below. Abatements are effective the first day of the month. If your unit failed after our payment processing, you will see this payment removed from your account on our next processing day.

Additionally, please be advised that failure to make the necessary repairs and provide confirmation will result in forfeiture of rental assistance payments to the date that the LMHA is notified that all required repairs have been made. Further, if the unit is not brought into compliance in a reasonable period of time, then the unit will be removed from the Housing Choice Voucher program. In order to avoid lost revenues we strongly urge you to take care of this matter immediately and make the required written notification to the LMHA. Tenant violations not corrected may lead to termination of the participant's voucher.

We ask that repairs be made, and written confirmation be provided from the Landlord to this office immediately. The written confirmation can be sent to 600 S. 7th Street, Louisville, KY 40203, or faxed to 587-7322, or e-mailed to Roseberry@LMHA1.org and/or mjordan@lmha1.org. After receipt of your written confirmation, we will schedule another inspection. Once the unit is certified to be in compliance with Housing Quality Standards the suspension of housing assistance payments will be removed, and payments will resume effective with date of repairs/confirmation. Confirmation must be in writing - will not be accepted by phone or phone message.

Respectfully,

Mark Roseberry and Peggy Jordan
